OLD MAIN STANDS PROUD ON THE HILL.

OLD MAIN'S OPEN DOORS WELCOMED 14,351 students to another year of life on "The Hill." The symbol of higher education in Arkansas stood with pride after a total restoration.

More than a fourth of the students that passed through Old Main's open doors were older than 25. In fact, 43.5 percent of the fall student enrollment was older than 21.

And while a growing number of students juggled personal challenges including jobs, families and spouses with academic challenges like term papers, final exams and grade reports, the pace of college life never changed.

Arkansas still loved to beat Texas, and the 14-13 football victory over the Longhorns proved to be a fitting farewell to the Southwest Conference rival.

In other sports, fans focused on the Southeastern Conference. The men's basketball, cross country, indoor track and outdoor track teams won SEC titles. And, three of these four teams earned NCAA championships.

SINCE 1871 Old Main has represented the University as the symbol of education. Decade after decade, Old Main, like the campus it serves, has been rebuilt for use by yet another generation of students. On Sept. 21, the building was rededicated after an extensive $10.5 million restoration project.

TOUGH MINDS & TENDER HEARTS

■ REV. JESSE JACKSON TOLD AN AUDIENCE OF 4,000 IN BARNHILL ARENA THAT THE COUNTRY'S YOUTH COULD MAKE GREAT CHANGES IN AMERICA. "LEADERSHIP IS NOT BY POLLS BUT BY HEARTBEATS," HE SAID.

By SIMON S. LEE

STUDENTS were called to action on Feb. 9 by Rev. Jesse Jackson, president of the Rainbow Coalition and two-time Democratic presidential candidate.

Jackson told a Barnhill Arena audience of approximately 4,000 that caring leaders with character were needed in the United States.

After praying for the Haitians, Jackson said that Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream was mirrored by the youthful audience.

"I wish Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. were here," Jackson said. "You resemble, in large measure, that nature of that dream tonight. You look like the real world order."

Jackson called for the youth of America to take back their political empowerment because it was the youth who had made the great changes in America.

"I call you to action," Jackson said. "I call you to hope."

The 1992 election season was a test of the youth's strength in the political process, he said. The presidential election would allow the younger generations to close the gaps that exist in America.

"There's a challenge to change presidents," Jackson said. "But, more than that, there's a challenge to change direction."

"We need giants of morale and character," he said. "We need tough minds and tender hearts in high places. We need compassion and vision to close the message and the moral gap between the leadership and the unmet needs of the American people."

Jackson said a lack of compassion and vision have allowed the American worker to be exploited. He said politicians have used welfare to divide the poor, divide the races and divide the right to vote for empowerment.

"What are you going to do about it?," Jackson asked. You have the power. You're called to political empowerment. There have been so many diversions from empowerment. Make our democracy real."

Poor people work everyday, he said. Most poor people aren't black, and most black people aren't poor.

"Most poor people aren't on welfare," Jackson said. "They work every day. They work in fast food chains. They work at Wal-Mart."

"They mop floors, and they clean up germs. No job is beneath them," he said.

"But when they get sick, they can't afford to lie in the bed that they make everyday," Jackson said.

This is why America needs a national health care policy, he said.

Jackson also called for Americans to stop the violence against themselves. Americans need to become responsible for their actions and stop accepting "short-term pleasure and long-term pain," he said.

"Our challenge is before us," Jackson said. "Leadership must not just know. It must care. Leadership is not by polls but by heartbeats."

He asked all non-registered voters in the audience to come to the front and register to vote. About 500 people went down to register.

"Stand tonight, for a new Arkansas," he said. "We are going to make you registered citizens tonight."

REBIRTH. After undergoing the $12.2-million renovation, Old Main again welcomed classes of students into its traditional home of higher education.

THE MAIN ATTRACTION

“Old Main is more than just bricks and mortar,” Sen. Dale Bumpers told the more than 1,000 alumni, students and guest gathered on the east lawn of Old Main to celebrate the rededication of the restored 120-year-old landmark.

EVERY story has a beginning, and for the University of Arkansas it started with Old Main — or as it was named in 1871, University Hall. The University’s story began 120 years ago with 160 acres and the firm belief in education by the people of Arkansas.

Another milestone in the history of the University was reached with the rededication of a building, which has stood as a symbol of learning.

Well, twenty years and $10.5 million later, Old Main was placed back into the mainstream, but not without much controversy and enthusiasm. According to a group of third-year design students who asked to remain nameless, the architecture of Old Main was ruined. But other UA students believe the renovation was good for the school.

“It kicks,” Brandon Sproles said. “It takes Old Main from the past to the present.”

From the Cement Mixer to the actual

Because the nearest railroad was 75 miles from the new university campus — formerly McIlroy’s farm, located on a hill northwest of downtown Fayetteville — most building materials for Old Main had to be obtained from the local area:

- Millions of bricks were made from clay dug within a mile of the site and fired in kilns on the property (2,600,000 bricks were used in Old Main; others were used to build private structures nearby);
- Sandstone from the McIlroy farm was used to construct the Old Main basement; limestone for the facade was quarried nearby;
- Lumber — 719,805 feet of it — was cut at a mill nearby on the White River;
- Iron (260,000 pounds) and nails (260 kegs) had to be brought in by ox-cart.

rededication, Old Main was a definite link between several generations. More than 1,000 alumni, students and guests gathered on the east lawn of Old Main to celebrate the rededication of the UA landmark. According to Sen. Dale Bumpers, the millions of dollars spent on the refurbished Old Main was probably the best money ever spent on the UA campus.

“Old Main is more than just bricks and mortar,” Bumpers said, adding that he was grateful for the new elevator because when he attended the UA, his classes were all on the fourth floor.

Sen. J. William Fulbright was greeted with a standing ovation when he took the podium at the rededication ceremony.

“It is a great pleasure to participate in this ceremony,” he said. The bells of Old Main interrupted him at 3 p.m., and he fell silent. He told the crowd that this was something worth listening to. Without the towers of Old Main to turn to in a time of despair and encouragement, there would be but mere tree tops and no more.

SPANNING THE DECADES

From completion in 1875 to rededication in 1991, Old Main towers over Fayetteville.

1871: Arkansas Industrial University established

1872: Two classroom buildings constructed on future site of Old Main

1873: Architect employed to make plans, specifications and estimates for a new building based on plans for the main building at the University of Illinois; construction bid awarded; temporary buildings moved to the west; ground broken for Old Main

1875: Old Main completed and first two floors put in use

1876: "Good oats" sown in front of building; "memorial" board sidewalk authorized from the building to point near Dickson Street

1879: Upper floors finished; organ purchased for chapel; bell purchased for north tower

1896: Sewer system installed, with discharge into valley to west

1897: Electricity connected to interior lamps

1949: Bells installed in north tower dedicated to all sons and daughters of the University who lost their lives in any war

1970: Old Main nominated to national Register of Historic Places

1973: Old Main's 282 windows replaced

1979: Arkansas General Assembly appropriated $4.25 million for restoration; Mott, Mobley, McGowen and Griffin, Architects, of Fort Smith drew plans

1980: Bids exceeded available funds; Arkansas General Assembly reappropriated a part for other University projects and left about $2 million for Old Main renovation; architects developed plans to use available funds to renovate Old Main's exterior and protect it while funds were raised to complete the job

1981: Last classes held in Old Main before it was vacated for restoration

1982: Fence secured building while restoration proceeded

1985: Arkansas General Assembly again agreed to appropriate $4 million for restoration if the University could raise the rest; Campaign to Restore Old Main launched with ringing of the North tower bell 10 times for the $10 million that was needed

1988: With funding assured by Governor Clinton's release of funds, restoration work began

1991: Construction completed; classes held again in Old Main; rededication ceremonies honor givers and friends

2000: Old Main spans three centuries of the University of Arkansas, its story still being told.

"The rededication to me means recommitting ourselves to education in Arkansas, not just the building, but education as a whole."

JEFF HARRELSON, class of 1992

"I had Latin class in Old Main. The class met twice a day, five days a week, on the fourth floor. I'm tickled to death they've got an elevator in this building now."

DALE BUMPERS, class of 1948
U.S. Senator

"Old Main is a symbol of the University of Arkansas, but, more importantly, it's really a symbol of higher education for all of the people of this state, and it fulfills a lot of aspirations."

H.L. HEMBREE, class of 1954

"Nobody is more enthusiastic about the restoration of Old Main than I am because almost all of my classes were in Old Main. And to see it now carpeted — I used to run up and down those steps, you know, and you could even tell which ones had the squeaks. If you were sneaking in or sneaking out, you were real careful about not hitting the steps with the squeaks, and it's just beautiful what they've done to it."

WILLIE OATS, class of 1941

"This dedication means an extreme amount to me because my wife and I both graduated here, and all of our four children have graduated from here also."

DALE SHEMAIN, class of 1937

"I really think the rededication gives us the self-confidence and a vision for the future that we would have never realized had Old Main not been given new life."

H

ANDFULLS of confetti rained down on the crowd. The Greek Theater was packed with enthusiastic students waving signs and dancing around.

Junior Sarah Loyd remembered the pep rally as the opening of Homecoming Weekend where the intense hopes for a win was obvious.

"There was just so much spirit," Loyd said. "You could feel it when the alumni cheerleaders participated, especially Willie Oats. The pep rally is more outgoing than the others. The people are all rallied up and ready to have a good time."

This year's homecoming celebrated not only the Old Main rededication, but also the long upholding University traditions. Students and alumni attended a Cougar Fry, dressed-up and attended the game where the homecoming queen was presented.

Sophomore Stephanie Dyer said that dressing up in red and white added so much to the game.

"It showed our school spirit and faith in the Hogs to the opposing team," Dyer said. "When you see the wave of red and white through the stands, it makes you feel proud. You know it makes the team more pumped up and play better."

After attending a brunch with her date at the Pi Kappa Alpha house, where their annual Riverboat was taking place, sophomore Angela Jackson and her date attended the game sitting with the whole fraternity.

"There were a lot more people at the game," Jackson said. "We were all crammed together and you could feel the excitement."

HALFTIME SHOW. Enjoying a 10-3 halftime lead over Houston, majorette Christi Walpole, freshman, and members of the marching band entertain the crowd of 45,850. A SHOCKER

"My heart dropped to my feet, and I was in disbelief."

H

OMECOMING is a time when friends and family come back to the university and celebrate the long tradition of the Razorback home.

For homecoming queen, Rachel White, having her friends and family at the game made all the difference.

"It was wonderful having them here because my parents are my biggest fans," she said. "They support me in everything, and it would not have meant as much to be queen if they were not there."

When White, who represented Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, received the call letting her know she was chosen queen, she said she went into shock and was thankful.

"I remember thinking, 'Oh my God, No way!,'" she said. "I could not believe it. My heart dropped to my feet, and I was in disbelief."

For White, homecoming day was a dream. After attending a brunch at her sorority house, she enjoyed meeting everyone at the game. She said a special part of the day was getting to be with her good friend and fellow cheerleader, Josie Ware, who was last year's queen.

"It was a beautiful day," White said. "It was special because Josie and I got to sit to with each other at the game."

A psychology major, White said that she had always loved the Razorbacks and had always wanted to attend Arkansas. White said that she hoped that she was a good representative of the school.

"I think I am a good representative because I am real positive toward the school and I try to show respect to the teachers and the school's values," she said.

Besides being involved in the homecoming activities, White represented the University at the Cotton Bowl where she attended banquets and was in the annual parade.

CONFIDENT CANDIDATE

S. CARPENTER PHOTO

under the blue skies at Little Rock's Old State House on Oct. 3, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton promised leadership "that will restore the American dream" and "fight for the forgotten middle class" through tax relief, help with education expenses and better, more affordable health care.

Clinton, 45, became the first Arkansan to run for the White House since former Democrat Wilbur Mills tried the presidential waters in 1972.

At the end of his 35-minute speech — much of it broadcast nationally on the Cable News Network — Clinton hugged his wife, Hillary, and 11-year-old daughter, Chelsea. They all knew that Clinton's political life had just moved to another level.

One Arkansas issue that Clinton failed to address was his promise made during last year's gubernatorial campaign that, if re-elected, he would not run for president.

The closest Clinton came to commenting on the pledge was saying he was prepared "to step beyond a life and a job I dearly love, to make a commitment to a larger cause: Preserving the American dream, restoring the hopes of the forgotten middle class, reclaiming the future for our children."

Clinton criticized the Republican administrations of Reagan and Bush for encouraging greed among the wealthy, raising taxes on the middle class, divisive "race-baiting" and abdicating responsibility for economic and education problems.

"I can tell you, my friends, where there is no national vision and no national leadership, a thousand points of light leaves a lot of darkness," Clinton said.

"As I've traveled across our state, I've found that everything we believe in, everything we've fought for, is threatened by an administration that refuses to take care of its own, has turned its back on the middle class, and is afraid to change while the world is changing," Clinton said.

Clinton said that if elected president, "everyone will be able to get a college loan as long as they're willing to give something back to their country" by repaying the loans or working in public service jobs. In a Clinton administration, he said, "Students and parents and teachers will get a real education president."

"We need a new covenant to rebuild America, a solemn agreement between the people and their government," Clinton said.

THE BIG ANNOUNCEMENT

Arkansas and the nation focused on Little Rock on Oct. 3 when Gov. Bill Clinton became a candidate for president. Approximately 4,000 people watched the event on the steps of the Old State House, and when it was over, Fleetwood Mac's "Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow" was used as the closing theme.

S. CARPENTER PHOTO

STANDING STRONG

Reaffirming his beliefs with a stern fist, the Democrat described himself as the candidate of change. "The change I want to make isn't liberal or conservative," Clinton said. "It's both, and it's different ... People out here don't care about the idle rhetoric of the left and right and liberal and all the other words that have made our politics a substitute for action instead of an instrument of change."

RISKY BUSINESS

Students were willing to risk going to jail for a night out at a bar.

By: KIM TRACY

Two, 21-year-old friends waiting in line at My Pleasure, an over-21-club, were impressed by how crowded the place was that night. Walking up to the bouncer, they confidently flashed their fake ID's. However, this night, "ABC" (Alcohol Beverage Control) officers were in town.

"The owner, who knew we were not 21, told us to leave because the police were there," one of the women said. "We ran. I looked back and saw four men in suits chasing us through the parking lot. It was a scary experience even though we didn't get caught."

Because many college students want to be able to get in where ever they choose, and be able to buy alcohol, the number of fake ID's used was at an alarming number.

Fayetteville police sergeant, Jerry Friend, estimated that 90 percent of all underage nightclub patrons are using fake driver's licenses to purchase drinks.

A sophomore said she got her ID from guys in her residence hall who were making and selling them for $25.

"I just wanted to get into the clubs that my friends went to," the sophomore said. "It works everywhere. I have never been turned down. I even passed through a cop in a Little Rock club."

A junior, who got her ID through a friend who found it on the ground at a club, said that she lucked out because the picture looked like her. She added that it was easier to get into some places.

"I have been questioned, but never turned away," the junior said. "Some places are easier because the harder ones don't want the reputation of letting under-age people in."

There were a wide variety of places to purchase a fake ID. Makers risk a criminal sentence for making the fake driver's licenses; however, the ID's are easy to purchase and an easy way to make money.

"I got my ID at a Dallas flea market for $20," a freshman said. "It is an Alabama license because it is one of the easiest ones to copy. It works everywhere — liquor stores and clubs."

According to Friend, the easiest perpetrators to catch were those with altered licenses. The minor simply peels back the plastic and altered the birth date.

"A friend and I used white-out and a typewriter to change the year on our real ID's," a student said. "It was easy and it works at the clubs here."

Several minors have expressed concern about being caught. ABC did visit clubs and check ID's.

"I get scared when they are in town," one minor said. "I don't want to go to jail. I was just extra careful when I heard that ABC was in town."

Another student said that ABC was successful for several reasons.

"I am scared of being busted by ABC," she said. "They are too suspicious and are usually smarter than the students."

"I try to let my friends go first to see if there is trouble," the junior said. "If I see an under-aged person I know in a club, I assume it is safe enough to go in."

PROOF OF AGE.

Senior Debra Baskin gets carded while trying to buy a six-pack of beer. Since the legal drinking age is 21, many students were forced to use fake identification if they wanted to drink beer.

Students who used fake-IDs often used the drive through window at liquor stores because it was not as risky as going into the store. Users admitted that it was easier to get into a bar than to actually buy alcohol at a package store.

What do you call five blondes in a freezer?

FROSTED

THIS is a confession from a natural blonde.

I went through life knowing that some brunettes got upset with all the hoopla that surrounded blondes. I guess brunettes and red heads had every right to be jealous — since blondes really do have more fun. And to make matters worse for the jealous brunettes, the most beautiful models in the world are blondes. And, if my theory isn't true, why do some brunettes bleach their hair blond? And, just when was the last time a blond died her hair brown?

Well, turnabout is fair play, and across the country it's been open season on blondes. It seems that almost every brunette I talk to starts spouting blonde jokes, and even though this blonde has a sense of humor, many of the jokes are offensive. Although I have never considered myself to be a total airhead, (although my friends may have a different opinion), these jokes portray us as stupid airheads.

I find it ironic that the only way jealous brunettes can get revenge on blondes is by giving us more attention. By now the jokes just bounce off me.

"Blonde jokes are as dumb as the brunette who tells them," I retort.

Here are a few of my all-time favorites.

PITCHING TENTS

CAMPED out to buy student basketball tickets, devoted fans arrived with tents, sleeping bags and even televisions, VCRs and living room furniture. However, not all of the campers were happy when demand for the 1,400 tickets significantly exceeded the supply.

BY KIM TRACEY

ANGRY students like junior Jennifer Robbins, who did not get tickets, said the police should have done a better job of keeping people from pushing their way into line at the ticket booths. "If someone cared enough about seeing the games to camp for two nights in the cold, they deserved to have tickets," Robbins said. "It was not right that the UAPD just let people cut in line."

(M. ROBERTS PHOTO)

• WHEN THE SUN went down, the party lit up. Some 1,500 students pitched tents, popped a few cold ones and waited in line for basketball tickets to go on sale. "I just wanted tickets, and basically it was just one big party," sophomore Jason Myers said. "We had a good time. We watched movies, played Nintendo, and drank excessively."

• Myers and his group of friends ran an extension chord into the stadium and created a home away from home.

• "We had a big living room, dining room, entertainment center and kitchen," Myers said.

• Other students spent the night keeping warm since the weather was freezing.

• "We had a TV with VCR and electric blankets," sophomore Jennifer Robbins said. "Fifteen people bundled together and watched movies. It was like being home. We had a gas heater cooking hot chocolate."

• Senior Brad Hammond camped in the cold because it was an excuse to drink to stay warm. However, before he even took a sip, he got caught.

• "Out of 1,500 people the UAPD smelt my drink first," Hammond said. "It sucked. I had not even taken a drink yet and I had to dump it out."

• Thirty minutes before the police would let the line through to buy tickets, the crowd rushed the ticket booth. Myers said it was not fair because it allowed students to cut.

"Hell no, it wasn't fair," Myers said. "It was fun camping, but then all the damn Sigma Nus showed up and kept people from getting tickets. Only five [Sigma Nus] camped out, and the next morning the house tried to blend in line."

Hammond, who camped out and did not get to buy tickets because of all the cutting in line, said he was still hostile to those who did cut.

"If I had gotten kicked out because of the alcohol, I would have gotten tickets through a friend," Hammond said. "I was 10-20 feet away when they shut the windows. If I see someone who told me they cut, I would still punch them today."

The campers also offered plenty of opinions about the upcoming basketball season and the lack of student seating in the soon to be retired Barnhill Arena.

"Barnhill is not the problem," Myers said. "It is a problem of Frank Broyles not accommodating the students. When there are 2,000-3,000 tickets for 14,000 students, it's a crock."

According to the athletic officials, 1,400 students tickets were sold at $60 each. Barnhill accommodates 9,000 fans. The new Walton Arena will seat approximately 17,700.

"The tickets should go to the students. The alumni got their chance to see the Razorbacks play when they were here, and 90 percent of us never get to see a game," Robbins said.

WHILE camping out proved to be a big party for all those who stayed down in the pit, students complained that camping was not an effective way to buy tickets. Although students had some complaints, they also had fun calling the Hogs while waiting on the ticket counter to open.
(K. BYERS PHOTO)

EARLY Friday, tents were beginning to pop-up and more people set up camp in preparation for the weekend-long wait for tickets. Even though students camped out, some were unable to purchase tickets due to cutting in line at the ticket booth.

A BALANCING ACT

For a growing number of non-traditional students, demands go beyond studying for an upcoming test. They may have to care for children or aging parents. Married students must consider the needs of their spouses as well as the needs of their professors. It's a balancing act that may seem impossible, but about a third of the University's students do it daily.

TAKING time out from her daily routine, Tiffany Byers reads to her son Jordan. Byers, a 20-year-old junior majoring in business, carried 14 hours during the fall semester, worked part-time as a receptionist for the Carlson Terrace office, and was a full-time wife and mother.

with older students in mind.

“Non-Traditional students need some consideration of outside forces,” said Julie Minkel, a staff member at the Office for Non-Traditional Students. “It’s tough to balance the demands of family and school.”

Unfortunately, there’s more to being a student than tomorrow’s biology lab and reading the first 20 chapters of the Iliad. Many students work or belong to social or professional organizations that place extra demands on their time. There’s laundry to do, groceries to buy, and bathrooms to clean: everyday life whether or not you’re a student.

For a growing number of students, however, off-campus demands go beyond looking out for themselves. They may have to care for children or aging parents. Married students must consider the needs

Non-traditional students face a variety of challenges beyond school that their traditional colleagues have yet to experience.

Historically, universities and colleges, including the UA, weren’t designed of their spouses as well as the needs of their professors. Besides papers to write and homework to complete, there are mortgages and utilities and taxes. It’s a balancing act that may seem impossible, but about a third of the students at the University do it daily.

Just for now, while their numbers are growing, they’re known as non-traditional students. If enrollment trends continue, however, non-traditional students will be so numerous at the University that the term may become outmoded.

A survey conducted by researchers at the University of Maryland at College Park found that age was the most common identifier of non-traditional students. Typically, students 25 years old or older are considered non-traditional. Traditional college students enter school immediately following graduation from high school, and they are from 18 to 22 years old. But age isn’t the only, or perhaps even the most significant, criteria for determining who is a non-traditional student.

Married students, students who are single parents, and students who work are considered non-traditional. Non-traditional students don’t tend to have the same level of financial support from parents or other adult members available to them as do traditional students.

Unfortunately, data that identifies non-traditional students in terms other than age isn't readily available at the University, said Fran Butler, assistant dean of students. However, of the 14,351 students enrolled during the fall semester, 4,586 — 32 percent — are at least 25 years old.

Many students who begin their collegiate careers as traditional students find that they have become non-traditional students without realizing it. Circumstances change, and what was once a part-time job for extra money has become a necessity for rent and groceries, for tuition and books. Some students marry and have children before graduation.

One of the challenges faced by the University is that of identifying the non-traditional students population; without knowing who they are and what special needs they may have, such as child care, administrators find it difficult to plan for those needs.

For parents, child care is an issue that can't wait.

Other non-traditional concerns include more class times for those whose work schedules don't conform to traditional class times, credit for life experiences and academic bankruptcy.

Academic bankruptcy, also known as academic clemency, recognizes that school work done in years past may not be representative of a student's current academic achievements. Many students who did poorly their first time around at the University would like to have their academic pasts erased or at least not included in their current grade-point averages.

"I find myself in the awkward situation of being haunted by mistakes I made two decades ago," writes Larry Stapleton. "The problem I am having is with the stigma attached to a cumulative grade-point beginning with these grades from two decades in the past. My concern is that when I graduate, my cumulative grade-point will not accurately reflect my abilities or efforts."

According to Butler, many institutions across the country offer some form of academic bankruptcy. The Academic Standards Committee at the University has proposed guidelines and drafted procedures to the Campus Council for consideration.

For many non-traditional students, help is needed financially, academically and emotionally. The Office for Non-Traditional Students provides services that were not available a year ago. Most non-traditional students are eligible for financial aid but find themselves in a crunch until it arrives. The office can help by contacting creditors such as the electric company and explaining the situation. Usually, the office is able to arrange for an extension on a late bill.

The Office for Non-Traditional Students addresses more specific needs of non-traditional students by hosting brown-bag sessions where seminars are given to examine topics such as balancing school, family and employment; time management; building self-esteem; and contemporary issues for women.

In addition, the Office for Non-Traditional Students has developed strong relationships with the faculty and the colleges.

"We have liaisons in all of the colleges and departmental offices," Kunetka said. "When we call to explain one of the student's problems, they listen. They are very supportive."

Often, non-traditional students are faced with either caring for a sick child or taking a test that cannot be made up. Work is another serious consideration. If an employer makes a demand that interferes with classes, it may become a choice between paychecks and grades.

But once the grades are tallied and the graduation parties are over, most non-traditional students re-enter the job market in search of a meaningful career.

Leigh Turner, director of Career Services said: "In my experience, employers have a very positive response when an older graduate applies for a position.

"They tend to be more mature and have a better sense of what they want from a job and what their goals and needs are. Younger graduates have a very tough time knowing what career path to take because they haven't fully decided what they want to do with their lives. Non-traditional students bring a lot of life experiences and savvy with them that makes them attractive to an employer," Turner said.

Turner said many returning students use Career Services for career counseling before jumping into courses that may not be appropriate.

Non-traditional students know what they want from their experience at the University. It may be to move ahead in their careers or to change careers altogether. For some non-traditional students, attending school is an expression of the human need to think and to reflect and to exchange ideas. Whatever their reasons for attending, the challenges are varied and tough, and most will tell you it's well worth it.

Still, it's not easy balancing adult responsibilities and a school experience that has been designed with someone else in mind.

INSECURITY

As security was beefed-up in the residence halls, students became insecure about losing their freedom

By KIM TRACEY

It's late, and most bars have closed for the night. The last draft has been consumed, and it is time to head home.

Three girls had been out partying after a stressful week at school. On their way into the dorm, a Fulbright security guard stopped them and asked for their keys. Realizing they were intoxicated because of their loud behavior, he detained them and called the police.

A policy that prevents intoxicated students from entering their own dorm rooms and could cause them to spend the night in jail and pay an $80 fine stirred up controversy.

According to the director of Residence Life and Services, Pat Newland, the "walk and talk" policy is not for people who are tipsy, it is for those who are in trouble.

"It would not be responsible to leave them alone," Newland said. "Our two concerns are them getting into their room where they could lay down and die. It happened at a Florida university."

One Fulbright resident and a visitor from her home town were almost arrested.

"I was sober, but my friend wasn't, so we ran," the freshman said. "I live there and I was being responsible for my friend. It wasn't fair. We had no other place to stay."

"I've heard of people who have slept in their cars, and I know of people who walked to a friend's apartment because they were too messed-up to drive. The policy that is supposed to make people more safe was really not," she said.

Created because 70-80 percent of all problems in residence halls, including vandalism, assaults and date rapes were alcohol related, the policy was not meant to ban the students from doing what they wanted.

"We were trying to keep people from hurting other residents and stealing their property," Newland said. "This policy really was the only big change. A lot of halls had done this on their own last year."

As a result of other campuses being held liable for the lack of security and the 500 reported crimes and incidents, Reggie Houser, Residence Life and Services security coordinator, was hired to address the problem.

"The residence halls became a playground," Houser said. "Furniture was stolen, TVs were broken, and we just wanted the halls to be a better place to live."

As a result of the strict policies, approximately 75 dormitory residents gathered in Yocum Hall Sept. 4 to voice concern.

Cindy Adams, a sophomore, argued that the policy was not helping.

"We knew that Residence Life and Services was going to make the policy more stringent, but not to this extent," Adams said. "It's driving people away, at least I know I'm not going to live on campus next year."

Houser said that from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. was when most incidents occurred and Residence Life and Services just wanted to keep people out of the buildings who had no business there.

"It is not impossible for crooks and criminals to get in, but they will have to try a lot harder now to get in our halls," Houser said.

Realizing that the policy had its problems, Houser argued that it just needed a chance.

"When the changes came, students objected, but as time went on, they got used to it. In three or four weeks, students realized that it was quieter, cleaner, and they began to support the policy," Houser said.

Freshman Deb Lee said that the policies created a better environment.

"I feel real safe," Lee said. "I was glad that they checked our keys and that the guys had to leave a picture ID at the desk to come in."

Residence Life and Services hoped that the new card readers, which are activated by ID number so people who live in the halls do not have to bother with the security guards, will help eliminate some of the invasion of privacy complaints. The ID card readers, which will be installed by Fall 1992, cost approximately $90,000 and will keep strangers out of the building.

A chance is what Residence Life and Services took and according to Houser, the result was a 51 percent decrease in incidents reported through November.

"Whether the students realize it or not, Residence Life really does care about the students and just wanted the dorms to be safe," Houser concluded.

"I thought the competition was very tough ... that's why I was so surprised I won. Anyone of them could have represented the University well."

I

T WAS A NIGHT THAT Melissa Harmon from Texarkana, Texas will never forget. Being crowned Miss University of Arkansas 1992 before a capacity crowd in the Arkansas Union Ballroom was "a very exciting experience."

The 20-year-old sophomore studying pre-physical therapy was chosen out of 14 contestants. She performed a classical ballet en point for talent.

"My ballet was done to a selection from the Nut Cracker. I worked on my own and I also took lessons for about a month from a studio in Fayetteville," Harmon said.

Nominated by Chi Omega, Harmon said it added a sense of pride to represent her sorority.

"I was very shocked and excited. It was an honor to win because I felt it was a great accomplishment and representing Chi Omega, I felt even more proud," she said.

Pageant director and Campus Activities assistant director Tammy Hedges said the pageant was the best one she had directed.

"I feel that any one of the 14 contestants could have represented the University tremendously well," Hedges said.

Myra K. Hale was named first runner-up and the talent winner. She performed Felix Mendelssohn's concerto in G minor for the piano. Angela Hargis, Angela Shropshire and Ann Davis were second, third and fourth runners-up respectively.

With the title of Miss University of Arkansas, Harmon received a $1,732 tuition scholarship, $3,150 housing scholarship donated by Residence Life and Dining Services, $200 clothing gift certificate to Randy's Another World, $100 book scholarship to the UA Bookstore and a one-year membership to Gold's Gym.

She also earned the opportunity to compete in the 1992 Miss Arkansas Pageant in Hot Springs.

Students who did not qualify for the university work-study program ventured off campus to seek employment.

Students who relied on their jobs to continue their education often found it hard to manage their course loads and the work hours.

Hayes said it was often difficult for her to juggle both her work and school responsibilities. She said that academics was her top priority, but without her job she wouldn't be in school.

"It is very hard and there is a lot of stress placed on priorities," Hayes said.

While most undergraduates worked primarily to earn money, seniors and graduate students, like law student Charlie Mulvey, looked for career opportunities in addition to paychecks.

"Financially I did not need to work; however, my chance of getting a better job increased if I clerked at a law firm now," Mulvey said. "It was quite difficult juggling work and school, but since this was my last semester, passing my classes is my main objective."

■ BILLY RIGSBY

OREO BLUE, FOUNDING MEMBER

BILLY RIGSBY SITS AT A TABLE IN THE BACK room of Dickson Street's 36 Club admiring the melody played by the jazz guitarist at the other end of the bar. The setting is a paradigm of the Northwest Arkansas music scene — patrons mingling in the aged establishment on one of the state's most distinctive streets. Sitting by the front window, accompanied only by his tip jar, the guitarist loses himself in his playing.

Rigsby, a youthful musician who was "born and reared" on the blues in Huntsville, says he tries to support local musicians as much as possible. "I try to get out and hear everybody I can," he says, sounding less like a fan and more like a member of a support group. As a founding member of Oreo Blue, perhaps Fayetteville's most exciting and authentic rhythm and blues ensemble in recent memory, Rigsby knows the difficulty of trying to establish oneself as a musical artist.

A music education major attending the UA on a music scholarship that he says he "would have been a fool to turn down," Rigsby joined with ace saxophonist Brian Crowne (formerly of Punkinhead) about a year ago in a common vision of revitalizing appreciation of genuine blues music among Fayetteville's younger music fans. But Rigsby says his influences are of a more contemporary vein, drawing on artists such as Robert Cray and Stevie Ray Vaughn more than B.B. King and Muddy Waters. But in the end, his best yardstick for determining whether his music measures up is his own.

By
BRENT STEPHEN

"I feel like I'm successful, as far as original material, when the audience likes it," he says and furrows his brow. "I'm trying to pass on some message. If I feel like the audience receives that message, or actually experiences the type of emotion I'm trying to employ, then I feel that as far as measuring up with someone else..." he says, trailing off for a moment. "I don't know. I just put effort into being unique, ya know? I just put a lot of effort into not falling into someone else's footsteps."

A former member of Jo Jo Thompson's band, another respected area blues artist, Rigsby now seems comfortable in the setting of Oreo Blue and admits to some lofty aspirations shared by his band mates.

"We want to tour nationwide, and we've been discussing going to Europe. But that's something that's far down the road," he says and then decides to put more bluntly. "We want to be successful. I mean, I guess every musician's ultimate goal is to win some Grammys, when it comes down to it."

In his free time, Rigsby also performs in a group with a decidedly different musical objective, the UA's Inspirational Singers. It's an opportunity that he takes on enthusiastically and an experience he describes as "heartwarming."

"The Inspirational Singers are kind of my family away from home," he says, adding that his role as the group's assistant conductor allows him to express his religious side.

"Religion is extremely important to me," he confesses. But he views his beliefs as a private part of his life and says he avoids imposing his beliefs on others.

"My relationship with God is just that — my relationship with God. I'm sort of a live and let live person with God." On the other hand, his beliefs are sometimes reflected in his songwriting, such as in his piece, "Somewhere," which he began writing in junior high school and just recently finished. It's a song, he says, about starvation, pain and other problems in the world of which he believes sin is the cause. And while the lyrics never mention God, he says it has a prevailing religious theme.

But for a while, the aspiring superstar first has school to worry about — an obligation that he says he has thus far managed to keep up with despite the rigors of performing several times a week in town and abroad.

"When I do my Sunday night gigs, it's hard to make my eight o'clock class when I get home at three in the morning," he admits, but says his willpower keeps him going. "I'm pretty well disciplined. I have to be, or I wouldn't be able to have so many irons in the fire. Yesterday I spent the whole day in a hotel, so I'm studying on the road ... and I'm drilling lyrics in class, ya know?"

ANOTHER Fayetteville ensemble that knows well the rigors of rock 'n' roll is the art-pop quartet known as BE. And like Rigsby, the men in BE are quite concerned with turning their pastime into a career.

"We've given ourselves the chance to try this, and other people in our lives have given us the chance to give this a go," says Talley Summerlin, the band's lead singer since its formation three years ago. "That's enough to sustain us for now. Now, obviously, if we want to keep doing this, we're gonna have to figure out a way to put roofs over our heads once we're all out of school. That's a realistic goal."

The core of BE was actually formed a decade ago in Houma, La., where all four members grew up before moving to Fayetteville to attend the UA. There Talley's brothers, Mark (guitar) and Paul (bass and keyboards), joined with drummer Duke Boyne to perform on a recreational basis. But since moving to Arkansas and solidifying the band's concept and direction, the three elder member's share Talley's desire to succeed.

"We want to make records and tour nationally and internationally," says Paul, the oldest of the three Summerlins. But while the band has yet to sign with a major label and tour outside the surrounding states, Paul admits that he and his band mates are content with their present standing. "Yeah, because we know it could be a helluva lot worse."

And Talley is adamantly unapologetic about his bid for the big time.

"A lot of people would say, 'Oh, that's selling out' or 'That's giving in.' Well that's bullshit. If you can't make a living at it eventually, then we might as well stay in the basement and never play live."

Part of the band's career plan has involved the recording of two independent albums, Sweat, which was recorded live during two shows at local venue River City in September of 1990, and Byramid, which was completed in a local studio the following year. Together, the pair serves as a biographical document of the band's musical development. From the adolescent humor of "Strip Poker with a Fat Girl" and Led Zeppelin posturing of the instrumental "Rock Dog" on Sweat, to the polished, intelligent craftsmanship of "Ah, Siesta!" and "Little Princess Windshield" on Byramid, BE has firmly established itself as one of Fayetteville's most developed and professional acts.

And in the meantime, BE has picked up a slew of fervent admirers who turn out for its local shows in the hundreds — the first album alone sold more than 1,000 copies and for a couple of weeks was the best-selling album at local record stores. But band members are conservative in their evaluation of the recordings.

"Whether [Byramid] itself turns out to be a project of any lasting importance I seriously doubt," says Talley, "but for us it was a great time to learn and explore."

"But we knew all along that, yes, this is going to be an album and we're gonna cut it and release it," elaborates Paul, "but all it really was was a glorified demo tape to stack on top of Sweat and say 'here's a bunch of our songs,' and a record company could go, 'Okay.' A record company can make you sound good, they have the equipment if the songs are there, and they are. That's most important — the songs are there."

BOB DYLAN told Jason Morphew to become a rock star. "Don't think twice, it's alright," Dylan told him through a car stereo on a trip to Indiana to meet some relatives for Thanksgiving.

"That song made me want to learn to play guitar," Morphew says. "I freaked my parents out and quit basketball and started playing Bob Dylan songs exclusively."

Morphew, a boyish-faced freshman, describes himself as having been a "basketball jock guy" in tenth grade when the emotion and honesty of Dylan's voice gave him a new set of priorities — priorities that would turn him into a poet and songwriter, and eventually an English major at the UA fronting a band called Dig. Today, however, his opinion of the bard of rock is not so high.

"Dylan's body of work is incredible," Morphew says. "But now, he's just on borrowed time it seems like. He plays 'Like A Rolling Stone' anytime he's on a show anymore. He's like a dinosaur."

Morphew started his first band, Lhuwanda (named after a Waffle House waitress he says), as a junior in high school, playing mostly Velvet Underground and Dream Syndicate songs, as well as some originals, in an acoustic "sing-along" format.

Lhuwanda lasted for about a year, playing the occasional set at Vino's in Little Rock, a few Methodist Churches, and a back-to-school rally at Park Plaza Mall hosted by Craig O'Neil ("probably the highlight" of the band's career) before getting tired of playing the same kind of music and breaking up.

"And then I heard punk," he says with a shy grin. The new discovery led to another high school band, Engage, which got the chance to open for Dischord Records' Holy Rollers. "It was really good, but we were terrible," he says. The new project was also short-lived and ultimately left Morphew a solo artist performing weekly acoustic sets at the Oyster Bar, calling himself Cut Jason, after a song he liked.

Dig came together after Morphew enrolled at the UA and was reunited with a friend from junior high school, guitarist Geoff Batson (formerly of another local band, The Psychotic Pets), who introduced him to drummer Chris Moody (formerly of Onion) and bassist Brian Abel.

"The band was already formed before we'd ever played," Morphew explains,

"because Geoff had told them about this guy that lives in Little Rock. The summer before school started, we played, and they just thought I was a freak."

The band had a rough go of it at first as they attempted to work through songs like "Good Golly Miss Molly," Buddy Holly's "Every Day," and some songs Morphew had brought with him. But while the group didn't immediately click, Morphew saw a spark of potential.

"It was really cool because you could tell there was a little chemistry," he says, "and then it just sort of worked."

Dig played its first public show Oct. 25, 1991, opening for Onion at the legendary Studio 225, whose original owners closed it shortly thereafter. Something of a transitional performance, it was also Onion's final concert before breaking up. A few weeks later, Dig played the Studio again, this time opening for New York's renowned punk band, The Radiants.

"Our first two shows [were] the biggest natural high," he glows, "everything was really cool. It was exciting."

It may have been exciting, but Morphew is cautious concerning his future as a megastar.

"It used to be my big dream to be a, uh — a rock 'n' roller kind of guy," he says, and then pauses. "Ya know,

I'd like to be able to do it full time and make a living off it, but just recently, in the last year or so, I feel confident I could live off my writing."

Considering the average wage for a small-time band, his decision is understandable.

"An opening band always gets a hundred bucks — that's the highest it can go." Not a great enticement considering the time and equipment required to keep a band going, especially for a full-time student trying to keep his grades up while nurturing a writing career. But, as Morphew explains, sometimes it's worth it.

"I think the highest pay we ever got was... a frat party, and I think we played like two songs and they unplugged us because they wanted to hear Garth Brooks. They paid us like 125 bucks. So that was cool. We got a lot of free beer. We stole a six-pack."

In any case, for the time being, Morphew is quite content to stick with the band — if only to take his mind off schoolwork occasionally.

"I don't know what I'd do without it," he says, "because it's such a great vent for your anger and your aggressions. I write so many essays, and it's so cerebral and academic that it's just fun to go out and jump around and wail, ya know?"

The most successful retailer in the business was honored with the highest civilian honor by President Bush.

C. BICKFORD PHOTO

WAL-MART FOUNDER and chairman Sam Walton was presented the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest civilian honor, by President Bush on March 17, 1992.

The citation, read as Bush and Walton's wife, Helen, tied the medallion around his neck, described Walton as "the embodiment of the entrepreneurial spirit of America and the epitome of the American dream."

The president flew into Fayetteville's Drake Field airport and then rode in a motorcade to Bentonville, where he awarded Walton the medal at the Wal-Mart general offices. Presidents rarely award the medal to businessmen, and they rarely fly from Washington to present it.

"Gosh, it's wonderful to be recognized and awarded this way," Walton said.

In typical fashion, Walton said his associates "deserve all the credit" for the award. Speaking to the more than 1,000 people crowded into the auditorium — most of them Wal-Mart associates — Walton said, "There are a lot of great leaders in this company. And we've gotten ideas from each of the 380,000 people in the company. That's the best part."

Walton said the honor was the highlight of both his personal career and that of the company.

Bush described Walton as "an outstanding example of American initiative and achievement ...who never turned his back on his roots.

"Sir, you are generous, genuine, tireless and tenacious," Bush said during his remarks. "You took risks and helped our country grow bigger and stronger. You brought out the best in people.

"We come here to honor a man who shows that through hard work and vision and training people right, many good things can happen," Bush said. "This visit is not about Sam Walton's wealth. He's earned his money and that's his business.

"He's been generous with his fortune, and that is in the great tradition of America's commitment to this concept that I call a thousand points of light."

Walton has been the recipient of many awards by national trade organizations and in 1984 won the Horatio Alger award.

CONGRATULATIONS.

President Bush and first lady Barbara congratulate Sam Walton after presenting him with the Medal of Freedom. The citation on the medal described Walton as "the embodiment of the entrepreneurial spirit of America and the epitome of the American dream."

"This visit is not about money; it's not even about philanthropy. This visit is about what's fundamentally good and right about our country," Bush said. "It's about determination, about leadership and decency."

The revival-style ceremony, reminiscent of a Wal-Mart shareholders meeting, featured an Army band from Fort Sill, Okla., that roused the crowd to a frenzy of applause when Walton appeared on stage.

Bush recited a brief history of Walton's career from his early work in other retail firms to the development of his strategy of offering small town markets name brand products at discount prices. Bush said the idea has worked making the chain the country's largest retail operation.

"Some things are going very well in the United States of America," Bush said. "And, one of them is Wal-Mart."

Others sharing the platform were Walton's brother, James "Bud" Walton, and David Glass, company president and chief executive officer, as well as U.S. Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., and U.S. Rep. John Paul Hammerschmidt, R-Ark.

Bush brought his grandson, 7-year-old Sam LeBlonde, on the trip to meet the billionaire, who developed the nation's largest retailing empire from one store in 1962 to 1,728 stores, 212 Sam's Club warehouse stores and numerous support subsidiaries. The chain had sales last year of $43.9 billion.

"I wanted him to meet another Sam," Bush said.

The citation on Walton's medal also reads, "Concern for his employees, a commitment to his community, and a desire to make a difference have been the hallmarks of his career. By sponsoring scholarships from Latin America, he has also worked to bring people closer together and to share with others the American ideals he so well represents. A devoted family man, business leader and statesman for democracy, Sam Walton demonstrates the virtues of faith, hope and hard work. America honors this captain of commerce, as successful in life as in business."

WAL-MART FOUNDER HONORED AT PRIVATE MEMORIAL SERVICE IN BENTONVILLE

Sam Walton, the man who piloted Wal-Mart Stores Inc. to heights never before reached in the world of retailing, died April 5, 1992 from complications related to cancer.

Walton, 74, was born in Kingfisher, Okla., on March 29, 1918, and graduated in 1940 from the University of Missouri with a major in economics. At the time of his death, his Wal-Mart empire operated 1,735 stores, 212 Sam's Clubs, wholly owned six major subsidiaries, and had sales goals of $54 billion for the fiscal year of 1993.

A private funeral service was held in Bentonville at the request of his family. He was also buried in Bentonville.

Wal-Mart President and Chief Executive Officer David D. Glass notified the 380,000 employees of Walton's death over the Wal-Mart radio network, which links more than 2,000 Wal-Mart related stores and subsidiaries by satellite.

"I speak for Wal-Mart associates across the nation when I say we have lost more than our chairman and founder ... we have lost a friend. For many of us, a mentor," Glass said.

Flags at the general offices in Bentonville and Wal-Mart stores across the nation were lowered to half-staff.

WORDS OF WISDOM. Walton, who was ill with cancer, wore the traditional company cap as he spoke to the crowd of Wal-Mart associates. "There are a lot of great leaders in this company. And, we've gotten ideas from each of the 380,000 people in the company. That's the best part," he said.

PRING BREAK FINALLY ARRIVED, and a road trip was just what the doctor ordered for sophomore Stephanie Dyer. So Dyer and two friends piled into a Ford Probe and drove 28 hours to Miami to experience fun in the sun the Florida way.

"I could not believe how long the trip was," Dyer said. "But every minute was worth it. I was getting to the point of burning my textbooks because I was so sick of school. Spring break was a major relief."

"The best part of the trip was winning a limbo contest at Penrodes Beach Club," Dyer said. "The whole week was crazy. I never had so much fun or met so many people."

Students found the week-long vacation provided an opportunity to rid themselves of school's frustrations with various trips. Junior Jennifer Robbins visited a friend in Miami and spent time on the beach.

"Spring break comes at the time when you think that you just can't go on with school," Robbins said. "I really enjoyed going to Florida and just getting away from school and Fayetteville. It let me know there was still more to life than studying."

Students often went to the beach for spring break to catch the first glimpse of the coming summer after a long Arkansas winter of rain and snow. Senior Brad Hammond spent the week in South Padre with several of his friends.

"I had so much fun that if I hadn't had all seven of my friends with me I would have been beaten up by a Texas Longhorn lineman for calling his fiancée breedable," Hammond said. "We got sunburned, partied in Mexico by day and Padre at night. We would have gotten a Greyhound bus one day if we could have figured out how to get it out of park."

Some students opted for the cold and headed to Colorado to ski for their vacation. Freshman Heath Willis spent his break in sweaters and coats braving the downhill ski slopes.

"Skiing was a blast," Willis said. "I didn't really want to go to the beach this year so skiing was a good alternative."

"I WAS GETTING TO THE POINT OF BURNING MY TEXTBOOKS BECAUSE I WAS SO SICK OF SCHOOL. SPRING BREAK WAS A MAJOR RELIEF."

"There is so much preparation for Redeye. The students actually began working on Redeye in December of 1991. It's a lot of work, but great fun," Blasdel said.

Redeye was not only an event attractive to the students, but also to others in the Fayetteville community.

"My parents and friends have built up the fun of Redeye for a long time," freshman Patricia Johnson said.

The attractions included the reggae band Inner Circle, comedian Cary Long, mentalist Craig Karges, carnival booths, Cajun-style food, and much more.

Through the crowds and confusion, most people enjoyed themselves and didn't want to night to end.

"Redeye was the first time I ever tried Cajun food. The comedian (Cary Long) and the band (Inner Circle) sure made everything worth it. Heck, they were Top A!" sophomore Jeremy Taylor said.

CENTER of activity

By SARAH GRANT

IN THE MIDST OF all the hustle and bustle of classes, the Arkansas Union offered students a welcome break from the rush.

Students could eat lunch, play video games, view art exhibits or watch movies at the Union.

However, not all the activity in the building was fun and games. Countless programs and meetings were conducted in the building each year. Students interviewed for jobs at Career Services, completed paperwork at the Student Financial Aid office, cashed checks at the Bookstore, received haircuts, arranged travel reservations or made photocopies. And, some students visited the Union merely to wait for a bus.

"The Union is a great place for students to meet other people, relax, eat a snack, or even use the Post Office," said Monika Eubanks, an information desk clerk.

"I only go to the Union to cash checks. It's the only place that will do it for me," said freshman Deb Lee.

One of the popular attractions at the Union was the weekly movie which played continuously each day except Sunday. Freshman Debbie Ray often attended the movie because it was free.

"It's unique. It is a nice study break, and they offer a great selection," Ray said.

For many students, faculty and staff, food was a major attraction in the Union.

Freshman Melissa Francis and her friends often got a break from eating lunch in the dorms by going to the Union.

"Sometimes all my friends in my dorm would go to the Union and eat pizza for a change of pace," Francis said.

In addition to Jim's Razorback Pizza, the Union offered T.C.B.Y. Yogurt, The Bus Stop and the Servery cafeteria.

For business or pleasure, the Arkansas Union was the center of activity on campus.

POPULAR myths abound in the public's perception of college students. Too often, today's college student is characterized as the young, socialite "preppie" driving Daddy's BMW.

Certainly there's nothing wrong with youth, fashion-consciousness or parental support, but those generalizations characterize a shrinking portion of student enrollment. There are vast other segments of the student population deserving of note, growing in number and gaining attention.

Before delving into an analysis of student demographics, here are some basic figures: The fall 1991 student enrollment is 14,351 — 11,859 undergraduate students and 2,492 graduate students. Of those 14,351 students, 7,768 are male and 6,583 are female. Most of the student statistics discussed in this article deal only with the undergraduate population.

One popular myth about college life at the University of Arkansas says that college students live extravagant lifestyles in a party-all-the-time atmosphere. Of course the BUS STOP.

Only 50.5 percent of all UA students registered a car for campus parking. But the other half was not without transportation. The Razorback Transit bus service averaged 9,000 riders each day. Twelve buses and two disabled-access vans serve seven routes through Fayetteville neighborhoods.

M. ROBERTS

non-stop party segment exists. Every campus has one. But they tend to make more noise than numbers.

Aside from a few campus clubs, most of the social event organizers are "Greek," the fraternities and sororities which make up the organized social side of campus life. Of course they do more than throw parties, but that is the activity most which has gained the most public awareness. The percentage of undergraduates in fraternities and sororities varies from 18 to 20 percent — about 2,500 students.

The University is home to 19 fraternity chapters and 12 sorority chapters. Of those 31 groups, seven are historically black organizations — four fraternities and three sororities.

Another student segment that tends to be exaggerated is athletes. All of the current student athletes — male and female, scholarship and non-scholarship — comprise 2.1 percent of the student population. (Yes. Ninety percent of the publicity goes to two percent of the students.) ►

OF AGE.

Nearly half of the students enrolled at the University were over 21-years-old. More than a fourth were older than 25. That growing segment faced a whole new set of challenges different from the demands made on college students of the past. Along with classes, labs and homework, many students also faced the demands of maintaining a household and raising children.

ON THE JOB.

Most students, like Ericka Pulphus, took part-time jobs to help finance their education. More than 1,300 students participated in the work-study program for on-campus jobs. University officials estimated that half of the undergraduate student population worked part-time on campus or in the surrounding community.

One interesting trend among UA students involves transportation. Only half of the 1991 student enrollment registered a car for a campus parking sticker. Certainly more than half drive cars, but a growing number of students and employees are taking advantage of the University's public transit system.

A spokesman for Razorback Transit said the service is now averaging 9,000 riders a day on the 12 buses and two disabled-access vans which serve seven routes in Fayetteville.

Despite some students' obvious affluence, it is the legacy of public universities to provide affordable, quality post-secondary education to anyone who's up to the challenge. But tuition and the associated costs of college continue to skyrocket at an alarming pace.

The University is no exception. As of the 1991-92 academic year, a liberal arts student is spending $1,816 a year for registration and fees, plus about $3,150 a year for an air-conditioned, double-occupancy room and a meal plan. Those costs are expected to rise, so it will cost that person at least $20,000 — plus personal spending money — to earn a degree in a four-year program.

But that doesn't seem to stop these students. And the answer isn't found in personal wealth, either.

In 1990-91, 88.5 percent of the total student population claimed Arkansas resident status. Except for a few out-of-state graduate students who were granted exceptions, all of those students were members of Arkansas families.

In that same year, the "estimated median income for a four-person family" in Arkansas was $28,665, according to the April 12, 1990, issue of the Federal Register. That's 26 percent lower than the national figure of $39,059. But student enrollment grew in 1990-91 despite the rising costs of college.

The University and the surrounding community offer a variety of resources to resourceful students.

On campus, there are virtually hundreds of opportunities for financial assistance including scholarships, grants, low-interest student loans and part-time jobs. Nearly 60 percent of the undergraduate student body currently receives financial aid in the form of grants or scholarships. Many who don't qualify for grants receive low-interest, long-term loans from student loan companies and local financial institutions.

Nearly all students will hold a part-time job some time before graduation. Dean of Students Suzanne Gordon estimated that "at least a third, or maybe as many as half" of UA students hold jobs this semester. Leigh Turner, director of Career Services, thinks it could even be higher.

"When I'm helping a senior prepare a resume, it is extremely rare to find a student — any student — who hasn't had some work experience during college," Turner said. Nearly all have worked at paid internships, campus work-study jobs, community service, seasonal jobs, co-operative education jobs or part-time jobs with local employers, she said.

Approximately, 1,307 undergraduate students held campus "work-study" jobs.

That's 11 percent of the undergraduate population employed in the work-study program. Many others hold hourly-wage jobs on campus working as tutors, health and fitness center employees, Arkansas Union food service workers and residence dining hall employees.

A 1990 survey of alumni indicated that 74 percent of UA graduates held a job at some point during college. Turner said she was surprised that figure wasn't higher, and expects that it will increase.

It is no longer realistic to believe that many students are being "bankrolled" through college by their parents. Furthermore, that route would be extremely unwise in today's competitive job market. There aren't many employers who will hire a college graduate with no work experience.

The most striking demographic change in today's student enrollment is in age. On the sidewalks around campus, it's becoming harder to distinguish the students from the faculty as "non-traditional students" are quickly becoming the norm.

According to the fall 1991 enrollment figures for all undergraduate and graduate students, 43.5 percent are older than 21. More than a fourth are older than 25. Anyone who automatically pictures a college student as a recent high-school graduate, 21 or younger, has overlooked nearly half of the University's enrollment.

The needs and demands of that growing population of older students have added a whole new dimension to the student services being provided by universities across the country.

SAM Walton's $4.5 million gift to the University provided the community with a state-of-the-art facility.

Originally the gift was intended to build a new arts and business center on campus, but the gift evolved into a complex that will be the envy of the country's arts community.

The Walton Arts Center, a $17.5 million cooperative effort of people in three northwest Arkansas counties was located on Fayetteville's historic Dickson Street.

During the height of dark economic times, people in this region quadrupled the original gift through a tax, bond issue and private and corporate gifts. The complex also has a $6.5 million endowed foundation to maintain the facility.

"To say the people in this region are remarkable would be an understatement," said Bill Mitchell, director of the Walton Arts Center. "During hard economic times across the country, when funding for the arts has become so tight, these people are building a state-of-the-art facility.

The center houses four distinct halls.

The centerpiece will be the Baum-Walker Hall, a 1,201-seat auditorium. It is designed for symphonic, chamber and popular music, along with ballet, opera, musicals and major drama presentations. A 20-ton capacity pit raises and lowers the stage apron for performances and the orchestra pit, located below the stage, has a capacity for 35 musicians.

The Starr Theater can seat 240 and can be used for a variety of events from chamber music to plays or films.

The Joy Pratt Markham Gallery is a 2,500 square-foot exhibit hall. Since there are no plans for a permanent collection, the hall is used for traveling exhibits.

Studio B is a small room with a sprung wooden floor and a mirrored wall. It is used for small dance and chamber recitals, group performances, receptions, rehearsals and teaching.

The Bradberry Amphitheater, seating 150, is a beautifully landscaped outdoor facility.

"This opens up all of the varieties of art to us but it also opens up all types of opportunities," said Mitchell. "This will not be limited just to fine arts. We will book all types of activities into this facility."

IMAGINATION CELEBRATION.

The opening of the Walton Arts Center also marked the official beginning of the six-month Jubilee Season that continued through September. The theme of the celebration was "To Celebrate The Imagination In Us All." Throughout the season, numerous events including many areas of art and education took place.

IT'S probably safe to assume that most people don't really know how a college professor spends a work day, what a professor does outside the classroom or what actually goes into teaching a three-hour course.

To envision the professor only as a classroom teacher is far short of the truth and leads people to wonder how a professor's income and stature are justified.

In his book, The University: An Owner's Manual, economics professor and Harvard University administrator Henry Rosovsky recalls a revealing incident:

A professor was testifying before a state committee in Sacramento (Calif.). The chairman asked: "How many hours do you teach, doctor?" Reply: "Eight hours." The chairman then said: "That is excellent. I have always been a strong supporter of the eight-hour day."

That story is funny because a prominent state politician was ignorant of higher education's conventional meter for college courses.

There are a few other things he probably didn't know.

Given an explanation of the professor's reply, the chairman would have been appalled to learn that the professor taught only eight hours a week. His ire would be fueled by his probable assumption that all the professor did in a week was eight hours of classroom instruction.

By definition, a professor is a teacher but much more than a teacher. In reality, a professor is expected to support his or her classroom instruction with the highest level of knowledge available on the subject, even beyond the highest degrees of formal education.

As a general rule, professors – especially at doctorate-granting, research institutions like the University of Arkansas – are expected to demonstrate independent research and proprietary findings or original works. This process is never-ending. The research and individual projects must co-exist with the classroom responsibilities.

In addition to duties of ► research, teaching, preparing for teaching and grading students' work, there are also certain administrative tasks such as advising students, serving on committees, and helping to run the department. Furthermore, most faculty members are expected to perform a certain amount of community service or, as in the professional schools like architecture and business, enough commercial practice to stay abreast of the field.

The University boasts on a large and accomplished faculty of teachers and researchers dedicated to both their fields and their students. While some of the graduate faculty are dedicated primarily to research and guiding graduate students, most of the faculty are full-time teachers. And about 80 percent of the faculty holds a "terminal degree" — the higher-level degree awarded in a particular field.

The University has a total of 808 faculty members, full-time and part-time included. Based on total faculty members and total students, the "students-to-faculty ratio" is 17.7 to 1.

The average course load of a faculty member is 11.5 classroom hours per week and the average class size is 19.4 students. Assuming a faculty member teaches four three-hour courses in a semester with 19 students in each class, that's 76 final grades to be given at least twice a year, with all the accompanying preparation time and evaluation.

Of the faculty members with advising duties, the average number of students advised by a professor is also

19. Some colleges have advising centers where a few professional staff and some faculty members provide advising for many students. In other areas, some faculty members advise as many as 50 students each year.

Beyond the classroom, faculty members are equally productive, generating big dollars for research and gaining national and international attention for the University.

By conducting research, writing books and creating original works such as plays and music, many professors can teach from their own materials.

In 1990-91, 75 faculty members published books, some of which are texts now in use here and at other colleges and schools.

In the last five years, faculty members have been awarded 22 U.S. patents and 8 copyrights for themselves or for the University. According to the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs, 40 "disclosures" from faculty are currently "in patent council" being considered for patents.

Being a research institution holds several advantages for the University and its students. For the institution, research attracts funds, and for the student, research carries over into dynamic and interesting classroom teaching.

In fiscal year 1990-91, research proposals from 287 faculty members resulted in more than $22.7 million in grants or contracts from federal, state or private sources. That's an average of nearly $97,000 for each applicant last year — a figure that continues to grow.

Here's where it gets interesting. If last year's research dollars were divided equally among the University's 771 full-time faculty members, last year's grants and contracts would amount to about $36,000 per full-time faculty member. Considering that the average pay for a full-time faculty member at the University is $40,619 for a nine-month academic year, it could be said that having a research faculty almost pays for itself.

Returning to Rosovsky's book, he says professors are driven by much more than income. Rosovsky asserts that college teaching is more "a calling" than a career, and universities are attractive both aesthetically and intellectually. People "enjoy the ambience," he says.

Perhaps that explains the lasting presence of brilliant faculty members at the University while their colleagues at comparable universities or in private industry earn considerably larger salaries.

All things considered, Rosovsky says, college professors are motivated by the opportunity to study, to experiment and to learn even more, then finally to teach that learning to someone else. He called it "a lifetime of building and renewing intellectual capital."

TO THE POINT.

Political Science professor Diane Blair speaks in the Union Ballroom. Faculty not only have the duties of teaching classes, but conducting research, grading students' work, and helping run their departments.

THE law school, founded in 1924, prides itself in not only teaching students the principles of law that all attorneys must know, but also in developing the analytical, communicative and technical skills that it takes to be an effective lawyer.

The Lefler Law Center proved to be very challenging and demanding to the law students, requiring them to study a great deal more than what was required in undergraduate school.

According to second year law student Stephani Brady, most students give up most of their social lives when school begins.

"Your whole day revolves around school. I have to study all afternoon and evening at least five nights a week," she said.

The law school courses were designed to provide a broad view of the American legal system while at the same time teaching students the law of the Arkansas legal system. The objective was to insure graduates of the UA law school are well prepared to practice law anywhere in the United States.

HARD AT WORK.

First-year law students listen carefully and take notes diligently trying not to miss a word during a constitutional law lecture. Many of the first-year classes were taught by the "case method," or the method of studying and discussing litigated cases.

PHOTO

The Lefler Law Center was also known for the Young Law Library. This library contained more than 200,000 volumes and the collection expanded at the rate of more than 10,000 volumes a year. Students had the ability to research even the most difficult legal problems with every type of federal document at their disposal.

Law students were divided alphabetically into three groups, and students in each group had all their classes together, therefore creating close relationships.

"Since the law school is not that big, you not only have all your classes with the same people, but also study and spend most of your spare time with these people too," Brady said.

Brady said that the most valuable thing she has learned in law school was that one must be aware of his rights.

"Even if I don't actively practice law, I have learned a lot of things and I am still learning things. I now know my rights and how to apply them, and I have the assurance that I will not be taken advantage of," she concluded.

INTERVIEW OPPORTUNITY.

M. WICHSER PHOTO

CAREER Services provided the vital link between the job market and the student seeking both part-time and full-time employment. However, Career Services wasn't an employment agency, but worked to prepare students for the obstacles they faced when trying to get a job.

According to Marshall Carter, a career counselor, several workshops were offered to the students to help better prepare them for the job hunt.

"Approximately 1,500 students sign-up with us for help with resume preparation, interview skills or job search strategies," Carter said.

Career Services also provided an opportunity for students to interview with many of the nation's top corporations and state and regional employers through on-campus interviews. In both during the fall and spring semesters, more than 150 companies recruited students for professional and summer employment. In order to be eligible to interview, students were required to attend an orientation session.

"One of the most exciting developments has been our on-campus interviewing," Carter said.

Career Services also provided a career library that assisted students by providing several resources about different occupations. The library helped students discover different jobs available with their majors.

For those students that needed help deciding on a major, Career Services provided a one-hour career development course designed to help undecided majors by assessing personal interests, values and skills.

Carter's advice to students who planned to use the services of Career Services is to start the employment search early.

"Begin your search 9 to 12 months before you graduate. Many employers will interview May and Summer graduates during the fall semester and this will allow you to take advantage of as many interview opportunities as possible," he said.

MEETING THE GOAL.

Director of Career Services Leigh Turner strives to continue to build an active job development program and to enhance employment opportunities for students and alumni.

THE University Theater kicked off its 41st season with "The Cradle Will Rock" by Marc Blitzstein. This powerful musical examined the formation of the labor unions in the 1930s.

The musical has a clouded past. When "The Cradle Will Rock" was to make its debut in 1937, the United States government tried to stop it from being produced because of the play's pro-union sentiments. Religion, politics, education and medicine were all closely observed from a cynical yet humorous point of view.

The theater started-off the Spring season line-up with Edward Albee's Pulitzer Prize winning comedy "Seascape." The play opened with a middle-aged couple who were enjoying a deserted stretch of beach, when they were unexpectedly joined by two sea creatures. Initially, the meeting of the human couple and the sea-creature couple was a tense and fearful situation. But, the fear soon turned to curiosity. The sea creature couple contemplated leaving their watery home. They question the humans about life out of the water and the humans provided the answers to the sea creatures' urgent questions.

In their Spring season, the University Theater also presented Neil Simon's "Broadway Bound." A hit on Broadway, this is the third installment in Neil Simon's autobiographical trilogy. The character Eugene Morris Jerome once again provided the soul of the play. "Broadway Bound" took place shortly after World War II with Eugene and his brother Stanley trying to launch their careers as comedy writers. The future looked bright for these two, but at the same time their parents were facing the harsh reality of divorce. The wide range of emotions are experienced through Eugene's eyes as he dealt with both his family and his career.

In the last production of the season, the theater presented William Shakespeare's timeless classic "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Capturing the spirit of youth and merriment, it was a lavish stage event that incorporated song, dance poetry and spectacle. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" had something for everyone. This was a perfect opportunity to introduce young people to the wit and wisdom of William Shakespeare in one of his most beloved comedies.

WHEN the word finals was mentioned, a growl could usually be heard. The word itself implied terror to many students.

"Hell on Earth" is what finals mean to junior Ken Emanuelson. Although finals almost always bring frowns, the subject, instructor and the type of exam determine whether the experience was survivable.

With finals came the big responsibility of studying, and students found different ways and places to study as well as fun study breaks.

For some students, one-on-one tutoring was the most effective. Junior Charlotte Jones found her tutor through a friend and found her extremely helpful.

"I needed tutoring because I needed to bring up a low grade," Jones said. "My tutor helped me more than any drill instructor or doing it alone. I improved my grade by learning more, and was ready for the final."

Some students found it easier to study in the library. Junior Scott Weber prepared for finals studying with a friend from his classes in Mullins so that that could be in an academic atmosphere.

"Studying in the library kept me from being able to watch T.V. or talk on the phone," Weber said. "I was guaranteed at least three or four quality study hours as long as I was in Mullins."

Along with study groups and sessions in the library, study breaks relieved stress.

"I make sure to have enough Coke, chips and other necessary junk food to make it through several all nighters," junior Paul Graham said.

Freshman Stephanie Dyer often went out on the town with her roommates for a few hours.

"There were times when the studying just got so bad that my eyes wouldn't focus and all the words on a page ran together," Dyer said. "Those were the days that we all went out to eat or to get a Coke."

Although most students dread finals, finals were also welcomed by some. As freshman Bobby Dwier said, "Finals mean Christmas Break."

MORE than 2,000 students who received their bachelor's degrees May 9 at the University of Arkansas were told by Harly Thomason, a television producer and Arkansas native, "there's no 'them', there's only us."

Speaking during commencement exercises for the J. William Fulbright College of Arts and Sciences, Thomason said unless Americans are educated to be tolerant, American society will be destroyed.

"Intolerance will lead only to oppression," he said. "The results will be like (the recent riots in) Los Angeles. Our society can do better and those that practice tolerance will lead the way."

Thomason, the co-producer of the television shows "Evening Shade" and "Designing Women," told the students, participating in the university's 116th commencement ceremony, that they are on the road to true education now that they have their degrees.

He said that if the graduating class of 1992 does not overcome the nation's economic and social barriers, they may be the first generation of Americans unable to reach their dreams.

"After the riot, it occurred to me that to pursue your dreams in America is not enough," he said. "We still have massive work to do in the area of race relations. We've been slowly creating barriers defined by economics ... and have arrived in a situation where people who have no hope, no dreams destroy themselves."

Thomason, a graduate of Southern Arkansas University at Magnolia, said people from this region have "an uncanny knack for making their dreams come true." He said those people are obligated to help others, too.

"If we succeed, America will last forever," he said.

Of the 2,000 graduates, more than 600 were in Fulbright College. Of those graduates, more than 160 graduated with honors.

About 125 doctoral degrees were presented, 650 master's degrees, 125 law degrees and 20 master of law degrees.

YEAR AFTER YEAR, Arkansas has dominated onto the national scene as the top track and field team.

This year was no exception.

The indoor thinclads claimed their first-ever SEC title in as many years in the conference and their ninth straight NCAA indoor title, edging Clemson for the championship. Sophomore Graham Hood recorded the fastest time in the collegiate ranks this season in the mile and took second at the NAAs.

At the outdoor championships, Brian Wellman and Gary Johnson placed first and second in the triple jump. Erick Walder won the long jump. Frank Hanley and David Welsh earned second and third place finishes in the 10,000-meter run.

The NCAA outdoor title, gave the Hogs the Triple Crown — NCAA championships in cross country, indoor track and outdoor track.

IT was a season of quick rising for the indoor and outdoor women thinclads.

Arkansas placed third at the SEC Indoor Championships in its first year and the outdoor season proved to be equally as productive.

Increasing its strength in the previously weak sprint and relay departments, the team's first SEC championship is only a few years away according to coach Lance Harter.

A few of this season's highlights included Nicole Teter's setting of a new school and SEC record in the 800 meters at the SEC Indoor Championships with a time of 2:05.24. Claire Lavers and Jamie Park continued with All-American style performances all spring long.

The SEC Championships proved to be a festive affair for the women as they took fourth place overall in the events. Sophomore harrier Michelle Byrne "byrned" her competition by winning the 10,000 meter and qualifying for the NCAA meet.

FIRST-YEAR tennis coach Kevin Platt knew that the move to SEC in would not be an easy one.

And, the results weren't totally pleasing. The team posted a 6-14 season in dual match play without a single conference victory.

"We played some of the toughest teams in the nation," said Platt. "We expected it to be great challenge and I think we rose to it."

At the SEC championship, Kentucky ousted Arkansas 6-0.

The team's senior duo, Jolanda Schreurs and Amy McGarrahan, led the young team. Junior Janneke Garos also spent much of the season at the top spot.

■ DOWN, BUT CERTAINLY NOT OUT

Although a hip flexor problem kept No. 6 singles player Amy McGarrahan, senior, from playing a full season since arriving in Fayetteville in the fall of 1988, she is thankful for any time on the court. "Whether I'm injured or playing, I just want us to do the best we can as a team," she said.

Junior Ruthie Miller (#2) leads the pack in the skirmish with the Tulsa Golden Hurricanes. Head coach Marcia McDermott called Miller, the scoring leader for the team for the third consecutive year, one of her "most reliable players to go to in a pinch." Miller set a personal season high of 14 goals, almost double her previous mark.

IT was a sweet season for the soccer team as it posted its finest season against the toughest schedule in school history.

In a season dedicated to the memory of Dana Dudley, the team's assist leader who was killed in an automobile accident during the off season, the 11-8 Lady'Backs scored upsets over two ranked teams and took a third to the closing minutes of double-overtime. Arkansas won a school-record 11 games, tied its longest winning streak at four, acquired its best winning percentage (.611) and shutout a record eight teams.

"The defeat of the University of North Carolina-Greensboro was a highlight of our season," head coach Marcia McDermott said. "It was the first time we've beaten a Top 20 team ever. Then, beating Vanderbilt gave us a sense of confidence we could compete at the Top 20 level."

■ A CHANGE IN GAME PLAN

Head coach Marcia McDermott advises freshman Julie Sill in the heat of battle during the Lady'Backs match with Missouri-St. Louis. Arkansas went on to win the game 2-0. McDermott found the much needed leadership in the team midway through the season and the team won a school-record 11 matches, acquired its best winning percentage (.611) ever and tied its longest win streak at four.

"How sweet it is. I didn't think that we would dominate [SEC championship] it to that extent. We gave out a signal to all of the other SEC schools that we are all together up here. We've got a helluva unit going, the men and the women."

JOHN MCDONNELL
COACH

ANTICIPATING a brutal attack from the competition, the men's cross country team was ready for the Southeastern Conference, and claimed the league title in its first year with a perfect score of 15 — the first time the feat had been accomplished in the SEC.

Arkansas' domination continued as the squad ran away with its fifth NCAA championship in the last eight years.

Brian Baker, Graham Hood, Niall Bruton, Eric Henry, Frank Hanley and David Welsh took the top six places at the SEC meet and eyed the NCAA Championships in Tucson, Ariz.

Bruton was the Hogs' NCAA finisher top finisher at second followed by fellow All-Americans Baker (third), Hood (seventh) and Welsh (16th). Henry finished 44th, Frank Hanley 54th and Gilbert Contreras 107th.

TWO was a lucky number for women's cross country coach Lance Harter. In his second year, his team placed second behind Villanova at the NCAA Championships.

The team posted a 72-1 record, a new school record, and was nationally ranked at second for the bulk of the season.

"To get second in the poll this year is one thing," Harter said. "To solidify it in the end with second in the national meet is a big plus."

Arkansas also went undefeated in four regular-season meets and three postseason meets, winning the Southeastern Conference Championship in its first season in the conference.

In addition to the victories won by the team, the Lady'Backs also won the Region IV crown for the second consecutive season.

■ PARTY TIME IN ATHENS

The Lady'Backs cross country team celebrated its first Southeastern Conference title in their inaugural season in the league by posting one of the best scores ever in the SEC title match. "We're obviously pleased with the team effort, and very optimistic about the future," head coach Lance Harter said after Arkansas dominated the meet.

AUGUST 31 was a clear, beautiful day in Little Rock as the Razorbacks opened their season in War Memorial against the Miami Hurricanes. Nationally, football pollsters had already written off the season as a loss. The critics claimed the team was without definite leadership, lacked in several areas and the motivation was gone.

Arkansas lost 31-3 to Miami, but from that point on, a resurgence resulted in the Hogs' winning five of their next six games while leading the SWC with a sterling mark of 4-0.

The zenith of the season came on Oct. 19 when a game-winning defensive stand against the Texas Longhorns resulted in the last-ever conference victory against UT. Arkansas finished the year at 5-3 in the SWC.

■ ON THE BATTLEFIELD

Freshman quarterback Jason Allen (#13) throws downfield in the final Southwest Conference game with the Texas Longhorns. Allen battled junior Gary Adams for the starting role all season and wrestled it away until an injury sidelined him. AS THE RAZORBACKS took their lumps from vengeful Southwest Conference opponents, the team prepared for the greener pastures that lain ahead of them ... the Southeastern Conference.

After losing freshman Jason Allen for the season to injury and thrusting fledgling sophomore quarterback Wade Hill into the position, the Razorbacks managed to regain enough composure to finish the season with a 6-6 mark.

Arkansas second-year head coach Jack Crowe guided his young squad into the Poulan-Weed Eater Independence Bowl in Shreveport, La. on Dec. 29 against Georgia, which gave his freshmen and sophomores some valuable playing time in pressure situations.

WADE HILL QUARTERBACK

FROM THE BEGINNING of the season, the nationwide sports pharisees predicted a gloomy season for Arkansas. After all, they claimed the team was without on-field leadership, motivation or direction.

Or so they thought.

The Razorbacks defeated Rice, 20-0, in the final game of the season to earn a trip to the Poulan-Weed Eater Independence Bowl on Dec. 19 — the first post-season bowl bid in two years. Arkansas traveled to Shreveport, La. for the contest and ran up against future SEC rival Georgia.

And the Hogs failed to measure up, falling 15-24. Starting quarterback Wade Hill, a sophomore, was intercepted five times — the fifth time in the final play earned him a place in the Independence Bowl record book.

"I don't know if this is a good measuring stick for us in the SEC or not," coach Jack Crowe said. "It's probably not very accurate, but it's the only measuring stick we have."

■ THE PRICE IS RIGHT

Senior fullback Kerwin Price (#25) bulls over three Georgia defenders en route to the end zone midway through the Independence Bowl. Arkansas looked to have the upper hand on Georgia, but the Bulldogs scratched and clawed their way back to the victory. Price capped his collegiate career with an impressive offensive display.

Nail pointed out that togetherness made the difference for the cheerleaders. Because the team spent so much time together, unity was very important, she said.

"Our main purpose was to generate and create support for all the teams," Nail said. "This was accomplished through working together. It's a long year running from August to April."

Nail was also pleased with the accomplishments of the pom-pon squad.

"We had a lot of seniority this year," she said. "They were very talented in their dance ability. They were also forced to work closely for long hours and act as a unit."

Fan support and appreciation was enough for the travel-weary cheerleaders who opted not to enter competitions because it would require even more travel time. However, the pom-pon squad entered competition for the first time in several years.

The men's basketball team soared to new heights, winning the Southeastern Conference basketball crown in its first year.

On the flip side, Nolan Richardson's team dealt with personal problems, a season ending injury to senior Clyde Fletcher and a disappointing second-round loss in the NCAA tournament.

The Hogs finished the season with a 26-8 record and a conference record of 13-3, including key wins over Kentucky, Alabama and Louisiana State en route to the SEC regular-season crown.

The season also marked the end of the collegiate careers of Lee Mayberry, Todd Day, Oliver Miller, Shawn Davis, Clyde Fletcher, Roosevelt Wallace and Fletcher.

Although these players will never wear a Razorback jersey again, the triumphs, tribulations and tragedies of the season and their past four years will be talked about for year to come.

THE SEC WEST race entered March with three teams vying for the top position. Arkansas, who had already dominated LSU and star post Shaquille O'Neal, would have to duplicate its feat and square off against new SEC rival Alabama once again.

When Alabama entered the Barn on Feb. 22, the Hogs battled pressure and fatigue, fighting off the swarming Tide 90-87 to take the lead in the conference race.

The last two games saw LSU and Ole Miss trying to play spoiler to the Razorbacks' hopes of a first-ever SEC basketball title. But the Hogs took wins over both to claim their first ever outright SEC championship.

However, trouble soon reared its head for the Hogs. Alabama got its revenge for the loss in Fayetteville by beating Arkansas in the SEC Tournament, leaving Arkansas waiting for an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

The Razorbacks got the bid, receiving a number-three seeding in the Midwest region, and they defeated Murray State, 80-69, in the first round before being eliminated by Memphis State 82-80 in the second round.

"This team may have not have made it as far as other Arkansas teams, but I'm just as proud of these guys, if not more, than I am of those other squads."

IT WAS HISTORY IN THE MAKING. For only the third time in NBA draft history, three players from the same college were chosen in the first round, and for the sixth time, did a school land four players in the overall draft.

For Todd Day, Lee Mayberry, Isaiah Morris and Oliver Miller, life-long ambitions came true in June as the NBA draft was held in Portland, Ore. and all four of them were selected by NBA franchises for a shot at the big time.

Day was chosen first of the Razorbacks, at eighth, by the Milwaukee Bucks. Later on in the first round, the Western Conference Phoenix Suns used their first round pick to acquire Oliver Miller. One pick later, Milwaukee selected Lee Mayberry. Early in the second round, Isaiah Morris was chosen by the expansion Miami Heat as a part of its youth building program.

away from the 11-14 "Baby'Backs"

ASPIRATIONS of another trip to the NCAA tournament and a shot at the SEC title escaped from Arkansas as the women held tough against a tenacious slate of SEC foes, but eventually succumbed to the competition, missing the NCAA Tournament field for the first time since the 1987-88 season.

The team, termed the "Baby'Backs" due to the flood of youth on the team, were led by Amber Nicholas, the lone senior on the squad. Nicholas added to her already impressive scoring numbers during the season by breaking 1,000 points for her career while setting a school record for starts with 85.

Arkansas carried a 8-5 record into conference play before tangling unsuccessfully with national SEC powerhouses Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee.

■ THE MASTER PLAN

Head coach John Sutherland goes over plays during a time out as junior Angela Davis (#21) and freshman Stephanie Bloomer (#12) listen. Sutherland entered his eleventh season at the helm of the Lady'Backs with a win average of well above 65 percent, one of the higher percentages in the SEC and the NCAA.

■ DETERMINED

Sophomore guard Sha Hopson (#14) wrestles the ball away from a defender during action. Hopson has risen to lead Arkansas in her first two years of play, playing in all 32 games last season, a rarity for a freshman. Sutherland believed Hopson's game stepped up a bit and she will be a major force to be reckoned with the SEC in the future.

■ JUST BREEZIN' BY

Point guard Amber Nicholas (#11) leaves Oral Roberts defenders dumbfounded as she drives for the score in a 88-64 non-conference victory against the Lady Titans. Nicholas, the team's only senior, took on the enormous task of leading the team into the SEC. Nicholas received several honors while at UA, including All-American honors from the press.

■ TAKING AIM

Yolanda Dickson (#15), a sophomore post, connects for two points in Arkansas' 74-66 SEC victory against LSU in Barnhill on Feb. 11. "She [Dickson] is definitely a great transition power forward, but she needs to work on her shot to go with her excellent rebounding," coach John Sutherland said at the start of the season.

K. REVELS PHOTO

■ SHOOTIN' THE LIGHTS OUT

Freshman center Stephanie Bloomer (#12) squares up for two against Oral Roberts. Bloomer saw a good deal of playing time for a freshman, but Sutherland wanted her to get valuable game experience. SEC women's basketball followers tabbed Bloomer as one to "bloom" in the next few seasons.

■ TURNIN' UP THAT "D"

Amber Nicholas (#11) applies pressure to LSU's Carla Berry in Arkansas' 74-66 win over the Lady Tigers. Nicholas finished the game with 23 points to lead all scorers. ■ BLOCKED SHOT

Michelle Thacker (#42) attacks a shot by Colorado's Sherrice King (#44). The block was one of three in game as UA stuffed CU, 56-51. "She has very good speed and quickness for her size, and there is no questioning her offensive ability," coach John Sutherland said of the 6'2" sophomore post.

AMBER NICHOLS, SENIOR GUARD, ON THE LSU VICTORY AND THE RETIRING OF DELMONICA DEHORNEY'S JERSEY

IT WAS A RUDE AWAKENING. Arkansas found out the hard way that the SEC boasts the best women's basketball in the country.

After years of dominance in the Southwest Conference, an inexperienced Arkansas team faced some of the finest women's basketball players in the game.

The Lady'Backs held their own against several ranked opponents, especially No. 5 Southwest Missouri State, before dropping a 67-52 decision to the eventual NCAA Final Four bound Lady Bears. One of the high points for Arkansas was a home win against new rival LSU 74-66.

Head coach John Sutherland said he hoped the team would use the season as a learning experience, and improve road play. The team posted a 1-10 road record this season with the lone road win against Oklahoma.

■ BATTLE FOR THE BALL

Angela Davis (#21) jockeys for control of the rebound with a Colorado defender during Arkansas' 56-51 win over the Lady Buffs at Barnhill. Davis, a junior, played in every contest during the season and averaged 7.7 points per outing.

Last year, the team finished SWC competition with a fourth-place mark.

In the new SEC waters, the men's dual team notched a record of 7-6, climbing above the .500 mark with a final win in its meet with Drury College.

Head coach Martin Smith said the late season surge would help the Hogs prepare for the future in the new conference.

Sophomore Alan Rapley landed All-American honors for performances in the freestyle, setting a season best for the 100 freestyle in the final meet. Divers P.J. Murphy and Scott McLeod also performed well, said diving coach Dale Schultz.

Swimmers take outstanding 10-1 season into waters and only place eighth in tough new league

"We want to send a message to the schools in the SEC that they'll have to deal with Arkansas. We're not just a team that they'll look at to be at the bottom of the pack."

MARTIN SMITH
COACH

SENIORITY, specifically seven seniors five of which were all-Americans, helped the women's swim team post a 10-1 season and maintain a national ranking in its first year in the rougher waters of the SEC — a conference in which five teams finished in the top 25 at the NCAA Championships.

At the SEC Championships, the team managed only an eighth-place finish and won two individual events. Nicola Atkinson, finished fourth in individual standings at the meet by winning SEC titles in both the 200 butterfly and the 1,650 freestyle. Atkinson and Missy Allert were the only swimmers that qualified for the NCAA Championships.

Allert grabbed 14th-place in the 50-yard freestyle and 15th-place in the 200 freestyle at the NCAA Championships.

Smith said that team unity was one of the major factors for the cohesiveness of the team. "I think our team unity is based on the type of people we recruit, it's a real family type atmosphere," he said. "We try to help our swimmers grow and improve not only in swimming, but in all facets of their lives."

Nicola Atkinson, from Cheshire, England, finished fourth in individual scoring at the SEC Meet by winning both the 200 butterfly and the 1,650 freestyle. She was the one and only Arkansas swimmer to win an SEC title. She finished the season with top team times in the 500 freestyle, 1,000 freestyle, 1,650 freestyle, 200 butterfly and the 400 individual medley. She re-set her own school records in both the 1,000 and the 1,650 freestyles in one race at the Luby's Invitational, in which Arkansas finished second behind Georgia.

PERCHED high in the national rankings for most of the season, two early wins at the Fox Acres Invitational and Red River Classic established the team's mark as one of the premier golf teams in college sports.

Brothers Deane and Brenden Pappas, Jack O'Keefe and David White were four of the top five golfers for the year.

The Razorbacks peaked as high as third in national rankings, yet managed to stay in the top ten for most of the season. In the spring, Arkansas won two tournaments in a row — the Southwestern Invitational and the All American — to stake their claim as the team to beat in the SEC Championships. When the tournament came around, the highly-hunted Hogs slipped and took third in the tourney.

At the NAAs, the team finished eighth. Deane Pappas finished 10th in the individual competition.

The new kids on the SEC block toss a

CURVE BALL

to SEC West and non-conference foes

MOVING IS NEVER EASY.

Uprooting from the Southwest Conference, where they had dominated the league for most of their stay, Arkansas transferred to one of the toughest baseball conferences in the nation.

But the head that wears the crown is always in danger.

LSU, a school that is slowly becoming the Razorbacks' SEC rival in every sport, took the SEC trophy last season and served as Arkansas' welcoming committee to the league, working their mastery over the Hogs in an April triple-bill.

Coach Norm DeBriyn, in his 23rd year, received strong performances from several of his upperclassmen leaders, yet believed the team had quite a way to go before they could rise to the top of the SEC West.

"I don't feel like we have a chance now to get into a [NCAA] regional. But we can't fault the effort. They battled. We were competitive."

BARELY MISS

the road to Omaha and College World Series

IT ALL CAME DOWN to the bottom of the ninth.

Or actually, the last week of the season.

The Razorbacks found themselves still in contention for a spot in the NCAA College World Series as action entered the final week. Key games with Alabama and Ole Miss would make the difference between traveling to Omaha and watching it on ESPN.

Arkansas took two of three from Alabama, but dropped two of three to Ole Miss and had to rely upon winning at the SEC tournament to get to the Series.

But it was not meant to be.

Arkansas won its first game in the tournament with South Carolina, but lost the following pair to powerhouse LSU to fade from the tournament and end the year at 31-26.

Players said the triumphs of the year far outweighed the setbacks in a year that saw Arkansas defeat some of the SEC's best and defeat then top-ranked Wichita State at Wichita.

"They'll be back next year," remarked one Birmingham sports writer.

"They always are."

"It's exciting, not only for myself, but for the team as well. I was able to spot my fastball pretty well, and I kept the ball over the plate. You don't expect to pitch two straight shutouts, let alone win two games by 1-0 scores."

Dan Hreha (#20) holds the runner to the bag at first base during a non-conference tilt. Coach Norm DeBriyn said Hreha posted impressive stats in 1992, batting .274 in only 95 at-bats. Hreha also stole 11 of the 13 bases he attempted.

■ RETURNING TO THE PLATE

"Catching really didn't come up until last year," said Scott Epps, a senior from Jenks, Okla. "I was just messing around with it, having fun with it in practice. One day, Coach [Norm] DeBriyn told me to go back there and throw a few. It seemed to work out, and he told me to work at it next fall, and it's worked out." Epps was a starter for four seasons playing a different position each year.

■ PUTTING THE TAG ON

Senior catcher Scott Epps (#3) makes the tag on an Oral Roberts player during Arkansas' 5-3 loss to the Titans. Epps' defense was as sterling as his offense, leading the team at the end of the season with a .335 batting average and home runs with ten. Coach Norm DeBriyn said that Epps was one of the quality players of the SEC.

20 ■ SUMMER SESSION

■ Summer begins with controversy as residents protest a plan to raze Carlson Terrace for new basketball arena; summer ends with a failed Soviet Union coup attempt.

MAY

20 Students enrolled in Session I and Session II of summer school enjoyed a more relaxed atmosphere on campus, although the courses were more concentrated.

"I enjoyed taking classes in the summer because you could become more focused on a topic," said freshman Clint Erickson. "The problem with summer classes is that if you miss a class, it's like missing several classes during the regular semester.

Senior Gary Holbrook enjoys tossing the frisbee in the warm weather.

28 About 50 Carlson Terrace residents continued to remind University officials that they didn't want their homes razed for the new Razorback basketball arena.

The residents gathered in front of Old Main to voice concerns about the possibility of losing their homes.

A location for the $30 million multipurpose arena had not been announced, but housing officials said that at least part of Carlson Terrace's 300 units might be demolished if one of several sites were selected.

Residents picketed the Frank Broyles

Athletic Complex and the administration building on May 24. They also presented administrators with a petition containing 379 signatures of people saying they want to stay at Carlson Terrace.

"The overwhelming sentiment is that we're not here for luxury, we're here for an education. Ninety-nine percent of the people we've talked to have signed and said they do not want to move," said resident Jim Runge.

JUNE

11 Chancellor Dan Ferritor ruled out the Carlson Terrace complex as the site for the new basketball arena, but said he "is leaning toward" recommending that the new arena be built just south of Carlson Terrace between the apartment complex and U.S. Highway 62.

Ron Horton, a Carlson Terrace resident and spokesman on the issue, said Ferritor's preferred site is "totally unacceptable" because it would cause noise pollution and traffic congestion.

"They're talking about building that thing 20 or 30 feet away, literally and that's just not acceptable — the noise pollution you'll have with 15,000 people cheering a few feet away from 800 graduates studying and their children sleeping," Horton said.

■ Controversy over new residence hall security policies and the long-awaited rededication of Old Main marked the start of another school year on the hill.

3 Pizza delivery restaurants, long distance services and radio stations were among the dozens of merchants that opened shop on the Union Mall to attract student consumers. Rain dampened the event but didn't stop students from checking out the Merchants' Fair.

4 More than 70 students living in the residence halls gathered in Yocum Hall to voice concerns about the new security policy to Reggie Houser, Residence Life and Dining Security security coordinator. See story on page 26.

9 During the first days of the semester, freshman Kristine Alford and hundreds of others juggled and rearranged their schedules prior to the Sept. 9 deadline to drop a full-semester class without a "W."

Confusion over the $10 drop/add fee caused several students to believe that the fee would not be charged during the first week of classes.

10 The heavy-metal sound of Warrant rocked Barnhill Arena.

Part of a triple bill with pop metal heros Firehouse and Trixter, the Warrant concert was a crowd pleaser according to students after the concert.

24 ■ ROLLING STONE EDITOR

24 Rolling Stone senior editor and music review editor Anthony DeCurtis spoke to about 150 people on "Censorship in the Music Industry." DeCurtis participated in the obscenity trial filed against the band Too Much Joy for performing controversial 2 Live Crew songs in Florida. "This country's puritan roots make it particularly susceptible to appeals to a narrowly-defined sense of morality. This is almost a knee-jerk response," he said.

12 There were homecoming festivities for everyone. The Cougar Fry cookout proved to be a preview of the 29-17 slaughter of the Houston Cougars on the football turf. The traditional pep rally and the crowning of Rachel White as homecoming queen at halftime made the weekend memorable. See story on page 10.

14 The traditional Razorback Men's Basketball "Midnight Madness" was once again a huge success. Official practice did not begin until 12:10 a.m., but contests and a pep rally started the season off with a bang.

16 The University Health Center and the Associated Student Government sponsored the Health Fair in the Union. Participants were given the opportunity to spin the "Wheel of Health" and attempt to answer health-related questions.

17 Sparked by a highly controversial Arkansas Traveler column condemning homosexuality, The Society of Professional Journalists sponsored a forum in the Arkansas Union Theater on "Coverage of Gay Rights Issues in the Media."

18 Little Rock's bitter 12-year-old newspaper war ended when the Gannett Co. Inc. closed the 171-year-old Arkansas Gazette and sold its assets to the Arkansas Democrat for $68 million. 29 ■ EVANGELIST JED SMOCK

29 "I've lowered myself considerably to come preach to you," evangelist Jed Smock said.

He fired his sharpest barbs at the sins of sex, "pre-marital kissing" and rock & roll. His assertion that rock musicians are drug users and homosexuals brought angry shouts from the 70 people on the Union Mall who braved the cold to listen, jeer and shout responses. Regina Carter was one of the many students that confronted Smock with her own beliefs.

Smock, his wife Cindy, and Paul Stamm from the Community Church in Columbus, Ohio have preached on about 600 campuses in every state but Alaska, as well as Canada and overseas.

13 The University established an 18-member Government Relations Advisory Group to develop campus priorities and strategies in dealing with the 1993 legislature.

According to Chancellor Dan Ferritor, "This is part of an effort to communicate on campus early about needs, so that we will be prepared to present our needs to the UA System and to members of the General Assembly in a timely way."

14 Five students of a group of 17 were injured in a van accident on the way to Denton, Texas for a Southwest Affiliates of College and University Residents' Hall conference. The van they were traveling in hit a patch of ice and rolled 1 1/2 times.

Stephen Boyes, Becki Clayborn, Lyle Jenkins, and Karyn Mrozowski were treated for minor injuries, while Michael Kalos was held overnight for observation and stitches.

15 Comedian Daine Alaimo, winner of Chicago's Funniest Woman Award, performed in front of about 125 people in the Union Ballroom.

During her two-hour performance, Alaimo joked about her mother, women's "sensitive" time of the month, and how she was glad it was winter so she could stop shaving her legs. Since she was Italian, she said, leg shaving could be an incredible chore.

15 The Baptist Student Union's "Heart Warming Winter Wear" drive provided many international students and their families with coats, sweaters and gloves.

The drive was designed to help the families prepare for the upcoming Arkansas winter since some are from warm climates and are not accustomed to the often harsh area winters.

16 The Phi Delta Theta fraternity, along with members of several other campus fraternities, formed "Men Advocating A Controlled Environment" (MACE) "for the sole purpose of protecting the campus females."

18 The University Programs special events committee sponsored the Nintendo Campus Challenge. The highlight of the event was the Video Competition, and the top scorers in both men's and women's categories won cash prizes.

The overall scorer, freshman Jeremy Grewe, was flown to Walt Disney World in Florida to represent the University during the 1991 Nintendo Campus Challenge. Grewe triumphed over 200 students.

Wesley Woods and Callie Wright received $100 cash prizes.

■ As students struggle with finals and enjoy Christmas break, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev finds himself a leader without a country and eventually resigns.

2 The Division of Student Services in conjunction with the Washington County Department of Human Services sponsored an Angel Tree. From Dec. 2-16 a Christmas tree, provided by the Freshman Involvement Committee, was set-up across from the Union Information Desk. Students and staff dropped off gifts for needy area children.

2 Two performances of A Christmas Carol marked the holiday season. The University Programs Fine Arts Committee sponsored the touring production.

3 The Fayetteville High School Choir performed a collection of Christmas carols for about 40 people in front of the Arkansas Union Servery to help add to the growing festive spirit on campus.

3 ■ CHRISTMAS CAROLS

3 A Washington County Circuit Court jury acquitted Cynthia K. Barnes, a former University of Arkansas athletic department employee of theft.

Barnes testified that she was showered with money and gifts from a friend and co-worker Frances Wentz, who actually stole the money.

Wentz pleaded guilty Sept. 5 to taking between $8,000 and $10,000 from the athletic department, and was serving a five-year prison sentence.

4 Terry Anderson tasted freedom on Dec. 4 after of 6 1/2 years of captivity in Lebanon and was handed over to U.S. officials, ending a brutal ordeal for both himself and the United States.

The freedom of Anderson marked the end of a hostage saga that haunted two American presidents.

19 University officials released yet another U.S. Postal Service audit of the bar code reader development project that said the University owed the post office almost $1 million.

The Postal Service asked for more than $430,000 in repayments or cost reductions associated with the research and development and production of bar code readers. That came on top of the Postal Service's continued refusal to pay more than $460,000 for work the University has already billed.

The audit said "lack of proper management" led to improper charges on contracts.

20 The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette reported that athletic director Frank Broyles made almost 300 long-distance calls to friends, business associates and relatives on the University's bill. Broyles said all but one of the calls, including those to his son and daughter, involved university business. He called the story a smear campaign by John Robert Starr, managing editor of the Democrat-Gazette.

JANUARY

20 Martin Luther King Jr. led the third American revolution, a former Assistant Attorney General and UA alumni told a group of almost 400 during a Martin Luther King Jr. birthday observance at the Arkansas Union Theater.

"Washington led the first American revolution," R.D. Tucker said. "Lincoln led the second during the Civil War, and Martin Luther King Jr. led the third American revolution. It was the civil rights revolution.

"This revolution made blacks and whites free," he said. "This is why we celebrate his birthday."

George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Martin Luther King Jr. were all "biracial leaders," and that was why their birthdays were celebrated Rucker said.

The speech was preceded by a celebration march of more than 300 people to commemorate King's life and beliefs, said junior Andre Valley president of the Black Students Association. The marchers walked in pairs, carrying candles, from Hotz Hall to the Arkansas Union singing "We Shall Overcome."

Tabitha Lewis, sophomore, said she was marching out of respect for King.

Rucker said that the march was symbolic and showed that the battle for civil rights had been won.

"There are some things that blacks and whites can do together," he said. "We must strengthen the family. There must be no pregnancy unless it is predicated on love. We must end the waves of crime. These things must be done.

"It's time to build new organizations," he said. "It's time to build a new American culture." ■ by MICHAEL LLOYD clear the way for the expansion of Mullins Library.

The members of the buildings and grounds committee said they had to decide between tearing down the second oldest building on campus and providing important new library facilities. They opted for the library.

The $6 million library expansion should be completed in the spring of 1993. The money will come from the fourth sale of bonds in the state College Savings Bond program. Hill Hall will be removed when money becomes available. No date has been set.

Hill Hall, which in the past has housed the journalism department, printing plant, Student Publications and University Relations, will be memorialized in a new part of the library.

26 More than a hundred outstanding residence hall minority students were honored for maintaining 3.0 grade-point averages or higher since they have been students at the University.

Frederick Thrower and Tanisha Joe watch the annual awards presentation in the Union Theater that was presented by Residence Life and Dining Services.

Chancellor Dan Ferritor presented the students with awards that recognized their academic achievements.

Carlton Bailey, associate professor of law, told the students to realize their new potential as leaders and scholars.

"It's not enough for me to give you kudos," Bailey said. "This achievement sets you up to do extraordinary things."

Receiving awards for academic success was just the beginning for the students, he said.

"You will have to deal with the problems on campus," he said. "You are the new campus leaders."

23 The third annual Women's Festival and Conference focused mainly on women's issues and problems of multiculturalism.

Deborah Mathis, former reporter and columnist for the Arkansas Gazette, spoke on the shortcomings of the women's movement.

"The women's movement has become discriminatory," Mathis said. "I think somehow in the movement to forward women's rights, we lost tolerance for differences among ourselves."

Ms. Magazine executive editor Helen Zia also spoke at the conference.

"Somehow race is no longer the hot topic in today's news and seems to have fallen off the national agenda," she said. "But at Ms. Magazine, it's at the top of our agenda."

"Racism in this country is still framed in shades of black and white, but there are complexities of race and sex involved."

3 Chancellor Dan Ferritor signed an official proclamation declaring April as Residence Hall Month. About 20 administrators attended the ceremony in the east wing of Fulbright Dining Hall.

The ceremony was opened by Angela Johnson, program director for RIC.

"This is to officially recognize Residence Hall Month and all that RIC does for the residence halls," Johnson said.

Johnson and Jacque Reese, RIC adviser, were the drafters of the proclamation and the Residence Hall Month Slogan, "No April Foolin'."

Ferritor read the proclamation out loud saying, "Now, therefore, I, Daniel E. Ferritor, do hereby proclaim this month of April 1992 as Residence Hall Month."

He said that this was the first proclamation that he had ever signed.

"I've never done it before," Ferritor said. "But, if any should be done, it should be for the residence halls."

24 "There's a little 5-foot-5 fellow from Texas — Ross Perot. Get to know him," Sen. David Pryor said while speaking on campus.

"Any candidate who can spend $100 to $200 million can make a big impact," he said.

"Ross Perot is saying some very simple things," Pryor said. "He's appealing to a lot of anger out there."

26 University Programs sponsored "That Spring Party Thing II" in the Chi Omega Greek Theater. The event featured "Jed Clampit" band and the comedy team of Arceneaux and Mitchell.

1 In Simi Valley, Calif. the jury in the Rodney King beating trial acquitted the four white Los Angeles police officers charged with assault stemming from the video taped beating of King, a black motorist.

In reaction to the King verdict, protesters took to the streets and riots broke out all over the United States. The riots were centralized in Los Angeles and the National Guard was called in to seize control of the neighborhoods torn by the riots.

Closer to home, about 100 members of the University of Arkansas Black Students Association met with local leaders in the black community for a rally on the campus to express their frustrations about the results of the King trial.

8 Graduation was held in Barnhill Arena where more than 2,000 students received their bachelor's degrees and of those, more than 160 graduated with honors. In addition, about 125 doctoral degrees were presented, 650 master's degrees, 125 law degrees and 20 master of law degrees. See story on page 74.

ALPHA DELTA PI

LOVE ALL AROUND.

Alpha Delta Pi members Ruth Ann Ramey, Heather Williams, Karla Benz, Jill Winham, K.C. Cotton, Ashlee McCaskill, Amy Harp and their dates attended the date function to be with friends on Valentine's Day. "Everyone had a fun time hanging out with their friends and boyfriends," Benz said.

SISTERHOOD.

Giving the pi-sign, an Alpha Delta Pi symbol, Tisha Harrison and Wendye Power greeted their new pledges as they ran to the house on bid day. When the pledges arrived at their new home, they were showered with gifts and then introduced to all the members.

HANGING OUT.

Trying to catch a few rays, Robyn Howard, Ashlee McKisec, Jenny Reynolds and Emily Beavers share a few laughs and catch up on the latest during the last few days of summer. "It's like one big happy family. It's always nice to have someone to talk to, go out with, or to laugh or cry with," Howard said.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Our house is special because it was founded on the tradition of sisterhood. We were the first sorority ever formed and we paved the way for all the other sororities following us. Another thing that makes my house special is the vast range of personalities and the unique girls that make our house a home."

■ PAIGE MITCHELL

"Not only do we get our meals prepared, dishes washed and all other housekeeping chores done, but when you're in dire straits for a certain color shirt or you have a run in your pantyhose, there is not only a friend down the hall but also a sister to loan you one."

■ JENNIFER REYNOLDS

"Pledging was the best time of my life. I got to meet so many different people. I always had something to do. It really helped the high school to college transition."

■ JUDY STINE

BID DAY AT LAST.

After a week of hard work and dedication to their house, Kari Kennedy, Laurie Hollingshead, and Monica Carter welcome their pi-pals, Jennifer Holman and Jenni Vester on bid day. Carter said bid day was special because, "It is the day that bids are extended to prospective sisters and they pledge Alpha Delta Pi — the first and the finest."

CHI OMEGA

IT'S A CLASSIC

During rush, the Chi Omegas performed a skit called Chi Omega Classic. Getting excited about rush, Gabriel Wood and Shannon Miller wait to talk to the pledges coming to their house. Rush provided an opportunity to meet new people.

CHEERS

Letting loose after a Razorback pep rally, the Chi Omegas party with the Sigma Chis. Pep rallies were a fun way to let the sorority show their spirit to the school as well as get geared up for a great weekend of football action.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Living in the Chi Omega house, you really get to know your sisters well. We don't mind sharing clothes or whatever we may need. We know each other inside and out, so we can just be ourselves. It is more fun than living around a bunch of strangers."

■ BECKY BELIN

"Chi Omega was the only house founded on the University of Arkansas campus. It gives us a special spirit. We also have a wide range of personalities ranging from theater majors, pom pon girls and a large representation in ASG making us real involved on campus."

■ BETSY LAVENDER

"I do not feel I would be happier in any other house. It makes me feel so proud to wear my letters. When I first got to wear the letters, I felt I had worked real hard for the privilege and was honored to actually wear them after I was initiated."

■ SHELLI BARNETTE

ROLLER DISCO

Going back to the wild and crazy '70s, Holly Burke, Suzanne Clark, Betsy Massey and Betsy Davis caught Saturday night fever at the Roller Disco function the Chi Omegas had with the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

SPORTING LETTERS

Pledges as well as members show their enthusiasm for Chi Omega on Bid Day. After bids were passed out and the girls ran to the yard, members were pleased to show the pledges to their new home.

DELTA DELTA DELTA

ALL IN THE FAMILY

SIGN OF THE TIMES.

At the Sept. 4, Back-to-School Date Dash, Tanya Coulter and Ginger Russell gave the delta sign to show their enthusiasm for their sorority.

LADIES IN WAITING

Waiting around for the night's rush parties to begin, Mollie Fleming, Julie Eddy, Stephanie Shields, Sherrie Schaufler, Kristy Turner, Jessica Verel, Tanda Wyatt and Heather Hanbrice relax and enjoy the fun.

DRESSED TO PERFECTION

Ready and waiting for their dates to pick them up, Angie Shropshire, Christy Shields and Jill Lyall are excited about the Delta Delta Delta formal.

"Because I felt the most comfortable at the Tri Delt house, I decided to pledge there. They stressed individuality. They looked at me for who I was and not because I fit a mold. They respected me for who I was and let me be who I wanted to be."

■ ANGIE SHROPSHIRE

"Bid day was real successful this year. It was exciting when the members got to see the girls run into the yard. We have gotten to know them all week and it is great to see them finally here so we can welcome them into the sorority."

■ LUCINDA BAILEY

"Living in the Delta Delta house is as close to being with a family without being at home. There are so many people to run to get a Coke with, shop at the mall with, or take you to class. It is just like a family type of atmosphere."

■ SUSAN FORD

RUN FOR THE BORDER

At the Delta Delta Delta and Sigma Nu Fiesta Frenzy function, Jan. 24, Angie Carmack, Traci Tisdale, Kelli Bryan and Lynda Nichols wore someros to get a feel for the real Mexican culture.

WHAT A RUSH

After a week preparing for the actual parties, Delta Delta Delta members make sure the final details are taken care of before the night's parties begin. Rush was a time that members pulled together, working late nights and surviving early mornings to come out with great new pledge class.

DELTA GAMMA

ANCHORS AWAY.

During Rush Week, Delta Gamma used its theme, anchors, and hosted Dee Gee Island. The day was used to promote what the sorority stands for while everyone got to dress up in sailor dresses and show their spirit for the house.

BOOO'S BASH.

Dressed to kill, Delta Gammas Michelle Spurway, Terri Long, Gina Berardoni, Deanna Dooley, and Jennifer Piester enjoy the Booo's Bash halloween costume party.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Study hall helps the pledges coming up to the college environment because you don't have mom saying 'study, study, study.' It is an environment for all pledges and members with under a three point. It is an incentive to keep your GPA up and a good way to discipline yourself."

■ AMY HASTLEY

"Delta Gamma is special because it is very big nationally. There are very few places you can go in the United States and Canada and not find a sister. This benefits us because it creates a network cable connection, where people help you find a job and get you into a new home."

■ SUSANNAH JARRELL

"Delta Gamma members let you be an individual and accept you for who you are and what you can offer to the sorority. You are not just sisters for four years, but you are a Delta Gamma for a lifetime."

■ CHRISTY ZANDER

CLOSE TIES.

Melissa Evans and Cassie Rozycki take a few minutes out of the busy rush schedule to catch up on gossip. Rush was a time to get new members as well as get reacquainted with old friends after the long summer.

TOGETHER.

Lynn Marshall, Jenny Hemphill, Hazel Fisher, Desiree Harbit, Stephanie Everitt, Monica Sutton, Michelle Orr, Susie Smiley and Jeny Furman look forward to spending the upcoming school year together during bid day.

SNOW WHITE.

Sporting their Snow White name tags as part of a rush week activity, Sherri Long and Stephanie Lynch enjoy the activities and each other's company.

KAPPA DELTA

DATE DASH.

At the Kappa Delta "Girls that make you go Hmmm" Date Dash on Oct. 23, Kara Lathrop, Jennie Allison and Allison Davis entertain their dates with a game of pool.

CLOAK AND DAGGER.

During the Kappa Delta "Cloak and Dagger" Halloween date function, Alyssa Adler, Courtney Brian and their model matching costumes. Holidays offered a great excuse to throw a party and get together with friends.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"I wanted to be a part of something new. The thought of being able to start traditions was very exciting.

Kappa Delta is known across the country as the 'friendliest sorority.' I found the members here to be very genuine and friendly."

■ CHRISTINA HICKMAN

"Our house is special because of its spunk. We are still new, [3 years old] and we continue to confront ourselves with new experiences and ideas. There is continuously new blood flowing through which adds to the excitement of being a Kappa Delta."

■ KARA LEE LATHROP

"I've made close friends that will always be an important part of my life. Kappa Delta has helped me improve my leadership skills and taught me how to get along with different kinds of people. We are a diverse group of girls who all have a special sisterhood."

SO HAPPY IT'S THURSDAY.

Ginger Baker and Mardi Collier pose for a picture at the S.H.I.T. (So Happy It's Thursday) party with Sigma Phi Epsilon. Thursday night proved to be a popular night for partying and relaxing after a tough week of school.

DRESSED TO KILL.

The "Forget Me Not" formal provided a romantic evening for Brooke Vanderboom, Lori Johnson, Holly Brady and Kristi Rush and their dates. Although the formal was Feb. 22, the night could have been an easy substitute for Valentine's Day.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

TOGETHER FOREVER.
New Kappa Kappa Gamma pledge, Anita Enderlin is greeted by member Barbie Frederich on bid day. Because rush is such a stressful week, Enderlin was relieved to have gotten a Kappa bid.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Wearing my sorority letters on the hill is not only a privilege but an honor. I find it pretty amazing that just a few Greek letters can make me feel a sense of pride, and also a huge sense of responsibility. When I sport my letters, people are judging me, thus I always need to be on my best behavior."

■ LESLIE DAY

"I got to meet lots of new girls pledging Kappa that all had the same values as me but were also diverse. I just had a whole new house of sisters that helped me and guided me into the college scene."

■ ANITA ENDERLIN

"We have the number one grade point in the Greek system. It is a great accomplishment and an honor to have a hundred or so girls make good grades. Being a Kappa makes me try harder in school because I don't want to be the one who brings us down."

■ EMILY ARNOLD

DATE DASH.

On Jan. 30, Sissy Goff and Kristen Cooper enjoy Date Dash — one of Kappa Kappa Gamma's first functions of the new semester.

FORMALLY FUN.

SCHOOL SPIRIT.

Representing Kappa Kappa Gamma on the Razorback pom-pom and cheerleading squads, Kristen Cooper, Rachel White, Helen Fulgham and Stephanie Ezell take a break from the game. Members of the sorority try to be involved in all sorts of clubs on campus ranging from spirit groups and social clubs to academic organizations like Cardinal Key.

KAPPA SIGMA

LIFELONG FRIENDSHIPS.

Living in the Kappa Sigma house provided members John Murphy, Shannon Meek and Brian Cahalan with nonstop fun and friendship. Because their house is full of diverse personalities, members said that they always had something new to experience.

THE BIGGEST AND THE BEST.

The oldest fraternity on campus, Kappa Sigma was founded in 1890. It is also the largest chapter of Kappa Sigma in the world. Jason Munsull said that the members work hard to uphold their status. "The men of Kappa Sigma recognize the tremendous responsibility of being so large and of being 'number one,' and we are taking all the necessary steps to maintain our lead of the pack." The men did just that by winning the Founder's Award of Chapter Excellence, which is the highest honor awarded an undergraduate chapter.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Living in the house is absolutely a terrific opportunity, both socially and academically. There is always something going on. The living conditions are outstanding because our house consists of both the fraternity house and an apartment complex. It's kind of like living at a resort."

■ JASON MUNSULL

"Being a member of Kappa Sigma has helped me in my grades, social life, and has aided me in making great friends. Being from out of state, it has helped me meet a lot of people here, and on the hill."

■ JOHN SYLJEBECK

"I would say that the location, size and authority are some good things that make our house special. But most of all the closeness that we share sums it up."

■ SHANNON FANCHER

CHRISTMAS JOY.

Tammy Barnes of Pi Beta Phi and Jeb Joyce of Kappa Sigma give a young girl from the Richardson Center a gift during a Christmas party.

MAN OF THE YEAR.

Kappa Sigma's Man of the Year was awarded to University of Arkansas Alumnus and the American Institute of Architects Gold Medal Recipient, E. Fay Jones. Jones is recognized by Worthy Grand Master Lloyd Zickert and alumnus adviser D. Malcolm McNair, Jr.

LAMBDA CHI ALPHA

SOCIAL STUDIES.

Social functions, ranging from formals to toga parties, provided a much-needed break from the pressures of school for Lambda Chi Alpha members like as Trent Peetoom.

HOOPIN IT UP.

To relieve the pressures from the day's classes, members of Lambda Chi often played basketball in their yard.

HOME SWEET HOME.

Members of Lambda Chi Alpha proudly take care of their house to keep it looking good. The Lambda Chi house was located at 120 Stadium.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Within the span of four years or less, Lambda Chi Alpha provides for numerous opportunities. As the second largest fraternity in the world, it allows you to develop your talents of leadership and gives the broadest possible range of experience.

The chapter gives the help needed to develop your mind and provides a favorable atmosphere for academic achievement, and the opportunity to gain self-confidence and a sharpened sense of human relations within an active social atmosphere.

Most importantly, Lambda Chi Alpha creates brotherhood. This implies the basis of union existing among its members is the closest tie which can bind men together. This richly rewarding experience of tens of thousands of Lambda Chis will continue to be shared by countless generations of future brothers."

■ SCOTT JACKSON

BEST OF FRIENDS.

After living together in the Lambda Chi Alpha house, Scott Jackson and Rob Ogle discovered that living in the fraternity house provided lifelong brotherhood.

SHARP DRESSED MEN.

Dressed to kill, members of Lambda Chi Alpha prepare for their rush party to begin. Rush was a very important week for the house as they put their best foot forward to make a good impression.

PHI DELTA THETA

Phi Delta Theta hosted a pre-Spring Break date function with Sigma Alpha Epsilon on March 14. Ready for a week of sun, members decided to start early and party the night before Spring Break officially started.

WEEKEND COOKOUT.

Phi Delta Theta and Kappa Kappa Gamma hosted a "Thank God It's Friday" party on Oct. 11. Scott Gregory, Todd Hale, Tracy Chrisman, Andy Vondran, Kevin Cole and Lee Shinaberry helped with the cook-out.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Each summer I don't think we get as much credit as we deserve recruiting members to come to the University. Hosting people at football games, Viking and Casino make potential students decide to come to the school. A lot of people we attract go on to be campus leaders. They are not your run-of-the-mill students and they get involved in clubs on campus ranging from Young Democrats to Cardinal XXX."

■ DOUGIE DOVER

"I am a fourth generation Phi Delt from my family and I had a lot of friends from my home town pledge here. I was real impressed by how they stressed academics and extra-curricular activities."

■ MARVIN DAY

"Living in the Phi Delt house is different than a dorm because you share a common likeness or bond.

By living in the house it is easy to find someone to go out with. It is like living at home with a lot of brothers."

■ TED DICKEY

FOUR TIMES THE FUN.
At the "So Happy it's Thursday" function on Oct. 17, Bo Morrison, John Williams and Stephen Smotherman kick back and share a pitcher. The Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Zeta Tau Alpha and Delta Delta Delta function provided more people to socialize with. Functioning with more houses became a new trend because it was cheaper and allowed more people to attend the parties.

BEST OVERALL.

The Arkansas Alpha Chapter of Phi Delta Theta, located at 108 Stadium Drive, was selected in August by the International Fraternity as the best overall chapter during the 1990-91 academic year. The fraternity received the Harvard Trophy Aug. 10 at the annual Leadership College held in Oxford, Ohio. This was the sixth time that Arkansas had won the award since 1925. The award is given on the basis of scholarship, chapter management and campus activities.

PHI MU

ALL IN THE FAMILY

MAKING NEW FRIENDS.
Welcoming her Bid Day buddy to the Phi Mu house, Gena Stidham took the new pledge Amber Maddox around the yard to introduce her to the members. Later, Phi Mu went to Hickory Creek lake to celebrate with the new pledge class by water skiing and laying out.

FOR A LIFETIME.
Karen Young, Dena Curry, Nikki Fawcett, Michelle Neville, Julie Gingerich, Jennifer Young and Lisa Curry spend the last night out on the town before finals started. Even though the Phi Mu bond lasts a lifetime, it was still hard to say bye to those who were graduating.

"Phi Mu means true friendship that will last forever, and sisters that I have never had before. The uniqueness and the sincerity of the members is what drew me to the house and I have never regretted my choice."

■ MELISSA CAPLE

"The Draft-A-Date function was the best one this year. A group of us decided to dress as war protesters.

It made us stand out because we were unique. We sent draft cards to our dates. I made mine a total surprise so it seemed like he was really drafted. They whole idea came from the recent war, but I feel it was a terrific idea."

■ STEPHANIE DYER

"This year Phi Mu hosted State Day at the University. It was wonderful to meet other Phi Mus from all over the state and be able to show off our beautiful campus. It was special this year because we got to hold the event in Giffels Auditorium in Old Main."

■ GINA STIDHAM

V ALENTINE BASH.

Sena Roberts, Stephanie Dyer, Kim Tracey, Jennifer Robbins and Jennifer Warner surprised their dates on Valentine's Day by taking them to the Phi Mu Sweetheart Formal. Robbins said the formal was unique because it was on a real holiday. "It was special to take your boyfriend to the formal on Valentine's Day because it's a great time to dress up, go somewhere nice to eat, and share a romantic evening."

DRAFTED.

After looking for a few good men and sending them draft cards, Melinda Caudle and Gwen Wegener picked up their dates in camouflage and headed to the annual Draft-a-Date function.

PI BETA PHI

RUNAROUND.

At the fall semester Roommate Run-around Date Function with the Chi Omegas, Pi Beta Phi members Brooke Terrell, Ashley Bennett, Anne Trinca Fulton, Elizabeth Cooley, Sarah Smith, Melinda Joyce and Martha Gray had a fun time finding out who their blind dates were after being set up by thier roommates.

ADDING ON TO THE FAMILY.

Waiting for their new pledges to run across the bridge on bid day, Michelle Grimmer, Amy DeVore, Camilla Nabholz, Julie Nofziger, Camille Thornton, Robin Schwartz, Angie Horner, Lauren Hartz and Ashley Hamilton are excited about the pledge class. Pledging Pi Phi provided many opportunities to meet all sorts of different people through campus and community activities.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Rush is so much fun. Meeting new girls from all over the South is so neat. Putting on skits and talking about how wonderful Pi Phi is makes us proud. Especially because we can see it in the girl's eyes. Not only is the house beautiful on the outside, but it is the girls that pledge here that make it the best house on campus."

■ LIBBY VAUGHN

"Pi Beta Phi means true friends and getting to live with so many great sisters. You always have someone to get a Coke with, listen to your problems, encourage you to keep going, and congratulate you when you have done something good."

■ REGGIE ENGELKES

"All the girls in Pi Beta Phi are so different. There is a lot of diversity here. I pledged this sorority because everyone acted like themselves and I was most comfortable here. Being a member has gotten me involved in the campus and community."

■ TRACI WALKER

WHAT A SMILE.

So happy to see each other after a long summer, Stephanie Springer and Kobi Van Kooten catch up on new gossip at a back to school party held in September.

WELCOME HOME.

Sporting their new bid day t-shirts and bursting with excitement, Susan Swaffer, Tiffany Ward, Cara Thompson are relieved when rush is finally over. The women were all close friends from Little Rock — making the day even more special.

GETTING TOGETHER.

Having a fun time at the Mad Hatters function on Oct. 29, Kobi VanKooten, Amy Luginbuel and Liane Herriott enjoy hanging out and listening to the band. Functions were a time when the members of Phi Beta Phi could get together just to relax.

SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON

Λ TOAST.

At the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Champagne Party, Kenny Trayman and Colley Burrow toast their fraternity brothers. Members and pledges got all dressed up with their dates for a night of champagne and dancing at the fall formal on Sept. 18.

Λ BALANCING ACT.

Sporting '70s attire and attempting to keep their balance, Ed Prewitt and Preston Freeman skate at the SAE and Chi Omega Roller Disco party on Oct. 2.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Living in the house brings you up to date with all of the events of the fraternity. The close contact you keep with the other members gives you an edge over out-of-house members. Having your brothers next door or down the hall makes it impossible to be bored."

■ CHRIS COOPER

"Sigma Alpha Epsilon is a group of guys that are very different, but all life together. We have a rich tradition here in Arkansas and across the country. Even more, is there is always a brother there to help."

■ BEN CARROUM

"After I was initiated, I wore my letters on the hill for the first time. A sense of pride came up inside of me. I knew I had earned the right to wear SAE across my chest and truly understand what it meant. I loved it!"

■ DANIELS BYNUM

WELCOME TO THE JUNGLE.

In preparation for their annual Jungle Party, David Corroum, Stan Payne, Chris King and Travis Garton helped build the "jungle." Held in the fall, members said it took a lot of work to build the jungle.

LET'S GET BOMBED.

At the Zeta-SAE Baylor "victory party," Sept. 20, top row: Thomas Fuqua, Casey Avent, Murrey Wanstrath, Roberts Lee, Daniels Bynum. Bottom row: Jason Fertita, Jason Collins, and Geoff Richardson celebrated after a football game even though the Hogs lost 5-9. The theme of the party was "Let's get bombed in Fayetteham."

Ho, Ho, Ho.

SIGMA CHI

SWEET VICTORY.

Harry Melburger, Walt Howard and David Dalton celebrate as Howard's touchdown put them that much closer to a Sigma Chi victory. Sigma Chi went on to beat Phi Delta Theta, 28-0.

BROTHERHOOD.

Lane McMurry, Roman Roark and Joe Jansen celebrate the Sigma Chi victory over Phi Delta Theta in the 11th annual Charity Bowl. Sigma Chi raised more than $17,000 in their effort to help the United Way.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"I think that the main reason that I pledged Sigma Chi is because as rush began to come to an end Sigma Chi backed away from the subjects of brotherhood, parties and good times and stressed the beliefs and values that the fraternity was founded on."

■ J.J. MILLER

"Besides the friendships, memories and brotherhood that I will cherish forever, Sigma Chi has given me a cornerstone of beliefs and values that will always be a comfort as well as a reference for the rest of my life."

■ BLAKE MILLER

"In the past few years Sigma Chi has made a concerned effort to get more involved on the hill as well as in the community. Charity Bowl once again brought in donations above and beyond $17,000 which was donated to United Way, and made the 28-0 score seem irrelevant."

■ ROSS MCCAIN

SKIING IN FAYETTEVILLE.

Kay Wilcox, Ray Bell and Debra Baskin enjoy the annual Ski Lodge party. Not only was it really snowing outside, a winter wonderland was also created inside the courtyard to make the Ski Lodge effect realistic.

PRE-GAME BASH.

At the Sigma Chi and Phi Delta Theta pre-game party held at River City, both fraternities had "one last bash before the clash." Blake Miller, David Bush and Lance Porter, all from Hot Springs, got together to celebrate the occasion.

GOOD DEED.

Representing Sigma Chi, President Saul Rousseau accepts a plaque from a representative of the United Way at the pre-Charity Bowl ceremony. The fraternity sponsors the full-contact football benefit every year.

SIGMA NU

BARN BASHING.
At their annual Sadie Hawkins function, Clayton Vaden and Kelli Bryan get into the spirit by dressing in overalls and cowboy hats. The weekend party was the highlight of the Sigma Nu's fall semester.

RUGGED AND MEAN.
Looking like serious gun slingers, Kevin Waldrum, Michael Shalmy and Stephen Raborn attempt to scare their dates at Sadie Hawkins.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Although Sigma Nu devotes time and money to many charities, our biggest contribution can be seen through our work with the Fayetteville Head Start program. We devote countless hours at two of the city's Head Start programs, and we also help with their different parties throughout the year."

■ NICK SANDERS

"Being a member of Sigma Nu has been very valuable to my college experience. Not only has it furthered my leadership skills, but I have also learned how to work with others. I have developed friendships in Sigma Nu that will definitely last a lifetime"

■ SCOTT HILL

"I joined Sigma Nu because I felt comfortable there right from the start. What impressed me most about Sigma Nu when going through rush was that they were well-rounded and successful in all areas."

■ IAN PERRY

LOTTA LUAU.

Reaping the rewards of the Sigma Nu relay competition, Bo Dunlap, Brandon Adams, Robb Fisher, Eric Botsch and Bradely Ward party at the Luau function they hosted for the Chi Omegas who won the competition.

TRADITIONAL.

Keeping up with tradition, John Raycher, Clayton Vaden and Jack Robbins grow beards and wear overalls to participate in the 52nd annual Sadie Hawkins party.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

"Wearing my letters on the hill let me show and feel my pride for ZTA. To know there are at least 150 other sisters to live, laugh and share my experience with is wonderful."

■ SHELLEY WOOLDRIDGE

"I think study hall created a convenient studying environment for the members and pledges. When everyone is together studying it even promotes a little productive 'peer pressure' to study. Zeta is interested in creating well-rounded women, and that includes being each member's academic assisting hand in goals and achievements."

■ LORI O'BRIEN

"I pledged Zeta because it was the only place I could really be myself. There is such a diverse group of people here, and I think that it is what makes it so special."

■ BECKY MCOLVIN

ROLLING OUT THE RED CARPET.

Letting loose after a busy week, Misti Cone, Cissie Faust, Shelley Wooldridge, Becky McOlvin, Randalyn Stewart and Angela Freeman relax and get ready to greet Zeta's new pledges when they run to the house. The whole house spent the day making their new pledges feel welcome. "Rush was a time to let the members of Zeta show others the love and pride that they have for the house," Wooldridge said.

DATE-A-ZETA.

At the date function, "Don't settle for less, go out with the best," Randalyn Stewart, Ken Abney and Misti Cone escape from the stress of school and homework to party at The Rink, on Jan. 24.

HOME AT LAST.

On bid day, Abby Young and Lisa Bice share the joy of their new home after running to house. After the welcoming was over, the women went swimming at an alum's house.

MAKING REVISIONS.

ASG IMPLEMENTS TEACHER EVALUATIONS, RECYCLING PROGRAMS

THE ASSOCIATED STUDENT Government helped students during the school year, but there will always be work to do on the student's behalf, Jeff Harrelson said, reflecting on his year as president.

"We've done a lot of good, but there were some areas that we didn't live up to our potential," Harrelson said.

The ASG's goals were to implement teacher evaluations, pushing for a fair basketball seating plan and increasing student retention, he said.

The retention committee was established to help make suggestions to the University on keeping students enrolled. The committee never "lived up to its potential," Harrelson said.

"Teacher evaluations went well," Harrelson said. "We should be real proud of our efforts."

The ASG distributed and collected evaluations to the students of participating professors and published the results in the Teacher Evaluation Guide to assist students with selecting classes for the fall semester.

Harrelson was elected primarily on the issue of campus recycling, which he said he wanted to make a priority during his term.

There were outside influences, such as updating the code book, that had to be handled by the ASG, that "sidetracked" some of his recycling efforts, Harrelson said.

"We didn't do as much as I would have liked," he said. "The UA doesn't have the resources to do all I'd like to do. But we've made some progress in the area of recycling."

The recycling effort should continue in future years because of the efforts of this year, he said.

"I don't want to let recycling become a fad," he said. "It needs to be incorporated into our daily lives."

Being ASG president was learning experience that has provided him with some important education, he said.

"I've learned just about as much out of the classroom as in," Harrelson said. "Being involved is an important aspect of college ... I've learned that I don't have all of the answers. ASG is a learning experience for everyone involved."

TRAVELER STAFF ATTEMPTS TO MAINTAIN QUALITY, GENERATE READER INTEREST

THE COUNTLESS HOURS spent redesigning the The Arkansas Traveler, improving the readability of the stories and making the overall newspaper more professional paid-off when the 1990-91 edition was presented the award for best all-around, non-daily college newspaper in the country by the Society of Professional Journalists.

"I thought it was great that the Traveler was recognized," said Steve Wilkes, editor of the winning editions. "All the credit goes to the staff. I always reserved the right to be in charge. But it [succeeded] because of the great teamwork by an excellent staff."

The 1991-92 editor, Brent Fusco credited Wilkes with bringing a new level of professionalism to the Traveler that continued into the following year.

"I respect what he did [Wilkes] for the reputation of the paper and I tried to maintain it as well as I could," Fusco said.

Gary Lundgren, business manager and adviser, praised both Wilkes and Fusco.

"During the past two years the Traveler has become a much more professional publication," Lundgren said. "I remember a time four years ago when few students would read the Traveler. Now, thanks to the work of the Wilkes and Fusco and their staffs, readership is way up."

The 1991-92 issues of the newspaper earned a superior rating in the General Excellence competition sponsored by the Arkansas College Media Association, marking the first time in several years the Traveler earned the top award.

"I think I was extremely fair [in coverage], but it will always be a challenge future editors will have to deal with," he said.

Fusco said he successfully maintained a goal during his editorship of not printing anything that could be construed as anti-Greek. He also said he made it a point during his editorship to generate reader interest by seeking out more controversial issues.

Fusco printed a controversial column condemning homosexuals, written by associate editor Steven Teague, even though he personally disagreed with the piece.

"As soon as Steven turned it in I knew it would gain interest," he said.

Fusco described the issues of The Arkansas Traveler he edited as "on the edge." And most readers would agree.

NOT JUST CHIT-CHAT.

Gary Lundgren, business manager/adviser for Student Publications, discusses a yearbook production question with the yearbook printer. At the CSPA convention in March, Lundgren received a Gold Key award for his contributions to student publications on national level.

THIRD GOLD CROWN PRESSURES YOUNG, ENTHUSIASTIC STAFF

WORKING LATE NIGHTS with pica poles, dummy layout spreads and Macintosh computers, the Razorback staff practically lived at the Student Publications offices when it came time to finish the 1992 yearbook.

"I never imagined before I took the job as editor just how much time and energy it would take to put together a yearbook," Baskin said. "But in the end, it was worth it to have gained the experience."

In the past three years, the Razorback has built a national reputation for excellence earning three consecutive CSPA Gold Crowns, two ACP Pacemakers, countless Gold Circle Awards and a second-place in the national Best of Show contest at the ACP convention in Denver.

"It was hard to follow such a talented editor [Douglas Scott] and three nationally acclaimed yearbooks," Baskin said.

Along the way, sales of the once dying yearbook have slowly increased. During the past three years, aggressive marketing, complete with a telemarketing campaign, have increased book sales by approximately 500 books.

Knowing the amount of work required to not only sell, but create a yearbook, Kim Tracey, associate editor, was concerned about having such a small staff.

"We had about five good people who were dedicated," Tracey said. "But knowing the amount of time and responsibility it takes to get it done, I think the staff worked out well. It's not the quantity of the staff that matters, it is the quality, and I felt we had some of the best editors."

"It was like working with close friends in a way," Tracey said. "We could tell each other what the strong and weak points were and know that the criticism was sincere. I think it allowed us to come up with great ideas working as a team instead of being individuals."

STAFF MANAGEMENT. Debra Baskin, editor, discusses a photo assignment on the telephone with photo editor Mike Roberts. Much of the editor's time was spent managing the staff, attending meetings and keeping-up with the payroll.

ELECTRONIC EDITING. Associate editor Kim Tracey edits copy on a Macintosh SE. Yearbook spreads were totally produced using desktop publishing. Copy was edited on MicroSoft Word, designs were created on PageMaker and disks were mailed to the Delmar Company for outprint to printing negatives on a Linotronic typesetter.

DOUBLE THE LAUGHS.

Karna Scoog and Kaia Scoog are two of the hundreds of students enjoying comedian Jordan Brady, former host of MTV's "Turn it Up," as part of the Bust-a-Gut Comedy Series, a new program sponsored by University Programs.

IN PERSON.

Meeting entertainers is one of the benefits of working at University Programs. Tammy Hedges, assistant director of Campus Activities, and Kim Norris, Celebrity Showcase chairman, enjoy meeting comedian Jordan Brady before his Sept. 5 performance.

FROM CULTURE TO COMEDY,
UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS
ENTERTAINS WITH DIVERSITY

WHETHER ATTENDING ONE of the free concerts or laughing at a sponsored comedian, University Programs events allowed students to escape the everyday routine of school work and enjoy themselves.

"Students were provided with a well-rounded schedule of fun, cultural and educational events," Silvia Scott, Campus Activities director said.

According to Scott, the addition of the Bust-a-Gut comedy program kept Celebrity Showcase busy.

"We started a comedy series which was a great idea even though in the beginning we were not sure how it would turn out," Scott said. "Every month we had over two hundred people attend. It was a great tension reliever."

Besides the comedy series, the Showcase also featured concerts in Barnhill as well as in the Union ballroom.

"Clint Black was the best concert this year," said Kim Norris, Celebrity Showcase chairman. "He played on Homecoming weekend so there were a lot of people in town. Plus, he is just so popular. The show had big screens of Black, so every seat was great."

Scott said the volunteer workers at University Programs not only get to work on exciting projects, but receive valuable experience.

"We feel that students making decisions, dealing with budgets, having the opportunity to be leaders and see programs implemented allows them to learn and be able to use skills they will need later in life," Scott said.

Having been involved in the Celebrity Showcase for two years, Norris said that her work has been very rewarding.

"I want to go into the music business when I get out of college, so being involved in Celebrity Showcase was a great start to getting some experience," Norris said.

Students were also able to be security guards for the concerts sponsored by University Programs.

"They get the experience of seeing the show and getting a free t-shirt," security head Scott Jefferies said. "It is kind of an honor to get the security guard shirt especially if they are a fan of the artist."

THE MOST IMPOSSIBLE task at last seems possible as I count down the last few working hours on the 1992 Razorback. Not only has it been a busy year, but also a very rewarding year.

One thing about this publication is for certain: You would not be reading it today if it weren't for a very talented and dedicated staff. It doesn't take one long to figure out that working on the yearbook is not a glamorous job. All of the hours and frustrating times sitting at the computer are enough to try anyone's dedication, but all in all, we were able to stick together and produce a book that we can all be proud of.

First, I want to thank Douglas Scott. There is not enough room in this entire book to give him the thanks he deserves for all the work he took off my shoulders. From handling all of the business end of the organization to ALL the advice he gave me from start to finish. He made his footsteps a lot easier to follow by being a good friend when one was needed most.

All of the section editors deserve a huge thank you. Kim Tracey for all her contributions. From writing to design, Kim was always pulling pages out of nowhere when we were in a deadline bind. Heath Willis was great in the sports section. From the minute I hired him, I knew I would never have to worry about Razorback sports. Bo Ebbrecht and Mike Roberts had to be the best photo editors I could have ever hoped for. Not only for all their great photos, but also for their patience and sense of humor.

Most of all I want to thank Gary Lundgren for all of his contributions to this yearbook. He went way beyond his responsibilities as our yearbook adviser as he worked endless hours to ensure that this book not only went to print, but that everybody was kept happy in the process. He's heard every excuse imaginable as to why work could be delayed just one more day, yet still managed to keep a good attitude as he spent entire weekends helping meet deadlines. Not only has he taught us all a great deal about yearbook journalism, but also a lot about responsibility. His patience and friendship will not soon be forgotten.

Thanks to the help of all of the Razorback staff I am confident that we have represented the 1992 school year at the University of Arkansas well. I hope the students will be able to look back and remember this year forever in the pages of their yearbook.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

Although students graduate and leave the University, every graduate's name is left behind. Since 1876, the names of all the graduating classes have been carved into the sidewalks. The first graduates are listed on the sidewalk in front of Old Main and extend for almost 1.5 miles across the campus. More than 90,000 names have been engraved over the decades.

COLOPHON

“A colophon — what’s that?”

At this point, some of you might be asking just that. Just as the credits at the end of a movie provide information to just a few film buffs, the colophon contains production specifications of interest to a small handful of publications buffs — specifically the 200 yearbook staffs from across the nation that request copies of the Razorback each year.

• SOFTWARE AND HARDWARE: All pages were submitted on disk for output directly to negative on an Imagesetter typesetting machine. The staff used five Macintosh SE computers and a Macintosh Quadra 700. Programs used included Aldus PageMaker, Aldus Freehand, Adobe Illustrator and MicroSoft Word. The business staff used MicroSoft Works for recording book orders.

• PRINTING: Delmar Printing and Publishing of Charlotte, NC printed volume 95. A sealed-bid process conducted by the University Business Affairs Office selects the printing company. The 1992 edition marked second of five editions covered by the current printing contract. Frank Myers, sales representative; Carol Dukelow, customer service adviser and dozens of other plant craftspeople worked above and beyond the call of the contract to see that job 1-9179 pleased the staff.

• PORTRAITS: Sudlow Studios of Danville, IL served as the official portrait photographer; however, all portrait work was handled for Sudlow Studios by Par Photo Limited of Fenton, MO. A sealed-bid process was also used to select the portrait photographer. Following completion of the 1992 edition, the University canceled its contract with Sudlow Studios and rebid the portrait contract.

• THEME/COVER: The Razorback staff elected to unify the yearbook with graphics rather than a slogan. The embossed, foil-stamped cover featured a tip-on photo overprinted in PMS 872. PMS 8543 is used with PMS 872 on the four-color endsheets.

• TYPOGRAPHY/DESIGN: Grid designs are used throughout the book along with too many type fonts to list. The text type appears in Galliard except for the endsheet and divider copy which is in Bernhard bold with headlines in Raleigh. The spot color in the sports section is PMS 485 with PMS 120 on the Beauty/Escort spreads. Colors used on the Greek spreads are process color mixes.
